Jeez Chris.
Whenever you get a hard-on for someone you really get a hard-on. Too bad for you, you weren't born with much.

RadioGuy, do you use that on CB to or do you prefer papa dog?

Well Chris,
I wanted a nickname that would help me connect with no-code hams and nickle upgrades on usenet.

I had two really good nicks in mind, but I couldn't decide which one use, so I flipped a coin. It was either going to be 'Slow Code' or 'Hey Stupid'.

I'll probably have to switch to 'Hey Stupid' after code goes away.

Then write the FCC and tell them to retain the CW requirement and make it 5wpm for Tech, 13wpm for General and 20 wpm for Extra.

I don't want CB'ers to get the ham bands either.

Markie, Maybe you could remind Woger he won a k00k award and that you and him have something in common now because you won one too. Maybe you can talk about your awards and be best buddies again. Then have Lloyd deliver some pizza and the three of you have a threesome and talk about how you

It was obviously a typo. But Jim and Dave put on their stupid face

Jim is so helpful. I recall asking for the formula to calculate a coil to match an end-fed half-wave antenna to 50 ohm coax. Then I got told right off that I should have a different kind of antenna and then the stomp fest began.

Did you mean that he has existed only after the end of World War II?
If you did, it wasn't what you wrote, PROFESSIONAL writer.

It'll likely even out, Len. He'll be here after you're gone.

I'm sure you have a point buried there somewhere. I'm damned if I can find it.

Irrelevant.

He can excuse his unfortunate (from your standpoint) late birth by tuning up a few after you've departed this mortal coil.

> Not on HF and sure as hell > not IN the military (he never served).

Your sentence seems to be made up of a clause. Well, super soldier, you have no way of knowing if he served in the military or not. I'm sure that vast quantities of licensed radio amateurs have tuned up and QSY'd SSB transmitters more times than you. Now what?

> Neither did he tune > up or QSY any RTTY of MUX TTY transmitter on HF in that time

What does the time frame matter in this example, Len? Are you claiming time-in-grade or something?

> Miccolis is a MORSEMAN.

Under the definition he provided, he certainly is. You are not a morseman. You are not a radio amateur. Better than a decade after you first appointed yourself advocate for something-or-other in amateur radio, you are still not a partcipant. Go figure!

> Those of the "CW gets through when

That's one of your factual errors and it seems to be a deliberate one.

There's another of your factual errors.

You write a great many non-sentences.

If it is so easy, why haven't you been able to obtain an amateur radio license, Len?

Yes.

Did the ARRL hamstring the modes, Len?

Yeah and amplitude modulation is still king of the medium wave broadcast band.

What's it to you, Len. How are you involved? Aren't you the self-appointed advocate for something-or-other in amateur radio.
Maybe you should go advocate.

Does CW outperform SSB or AM or FM under adverse circumstances, Len?

I'm really curious about when you might be expected to explain your Philadelphia is a rather large city, Len. I don't recall Jim's having written that it was the center of the United States. There isn't much in the center of the United States. What does the center of the United

Despite your diatribe, I don't believe that Jim is "UNaware", blissfully

Yes, you are, Brian. You just won't admit it.

When?

As of October 30, the number of current, unexpired FCC issued amateur radio licenses was:

Novice: 24,155
Technician: 287,293
Technician Plus: 34,851
General: 131,966
Advanced: 70,602
Extra: 108,545

Total 657,412.

FCC still counts Technician Plus separately from Technician.

The current number of Technicians amounts to 43.7006017...% of the total. That's not half. Some of them are code-tested, too.

> They are all Technicians now.

That is an untruth.

FCC still counts Technician Plus separately from Technician. The number of Technician Plus licenses is shrinking as Technician Pluses are renewed as Technician, expire, or upgrade.

> The Technician license has no requirement for a > code exam.

Yet some Technicians have passed a Morse Code test, and have some HF privileges.

> Should a Technician wish to use what were once Technician
> Plus priveleges, they're on their own to show eligibility.

Which requires that they retain a document showing their qualification.
Like keeping a copy of their old Technician Plus license.

However, that's not the point. FCC still counts Technician Plus separately from Technician. The number of Technician Plus licenses is shrinking as Technician Pluses are renewed as Technician, expire, or upgrade.

Not necessarily.

An amateur could "rarely" use Morse Code because they "rarely" get on the air. Or because they use some other mode a lot more.

What point is that?

W3RV and I actually participate in Field Day, and actually make the scores we claim. The QSOs are real.

You can compare scores all you want. How many points did you make in

The Morse Code test consists of 5 minutes of Morse Code. How many words are in those tests?

At 5 wpm, there would be 25
At 13 wpm, there would be 65
At 15 wpm, there would be 75

(A word is 5 characters)

Incorrect. Part 95 authorizes everyone, as long as they meet the requirements.

That obviously makes you a real programmer. But it is the hard way to do things, especially if you find a mistake and need to insert a new instruction somewhere. All of the target addresses after the inserted instruction change, and you have to go back and correct all references to those later instructions, as well as some references to earlier instructions (relative jump instructions change value). I much prefer the "luxury" of an assembler, because it will do all of that stuff for you.

To stay on topic, I'd probably better mention that Michael Jackson's first chimp was named "Bubbles" and that the chimp and Michael would dress alike wherever they went. The chimp later moved away to Chassell, Michigan and started a consulting business. Michael took up with another chimp named Max, thereby sending Bubbles into a jealous rage. Bubbles has been acting his anger out in Usenet's rrap ever since. He can be recognized easily, because chimps don't spell or type all that well, and his posts stick out like a sore thumb. He tries to cover it up by claiming to be dyslexic, but everyone recognizes a chimp's typing when they see it, and they know that the poster is really Bubbles.

Not sure I know of too many CB'er who can run 8 uhf links with a voting system and multiple recieve sites for a repeater.
I have yet to see any CB'ers run PTP microwave links, run a 31 cycle wide digital transmitter, run packet networks, design and build HF antennas for specific purposes, none of which have anything to do with morse code.

Not unlike a single engine land private pilot license, it's a license to LEARN, an extra class who passed a 20 wpm code test may know little or nothing about MANY technical aspects of ham radio, you have the license to operate, NOW the learning begins not the other way around.

Look at the number of callsigns that are expiring, either they are DEAD or they are a no code technician who never found what they were looking for in ham radio. Scads of KC8 callsigns are falling off. So what's the big concern? if they decided to stay they are either continuing to learn and have pursued other aspects of ham radio OR they have parked it somewhere on a 2m repeater, either way they don't bother me.

Jackass op's have been around since the first transmitters were on the air whether phone OR CW, yes, there are plenty of jackass CW op's too.
Learning morse is only an artificial spam filter for ham radio, so sorry, that's not the way it is, there are PLENTY of Extra Class hams who passed 20 wpm, got thier mic wired up and never touched a key again and there are plenty who behave very badly on VHF and HF who have passed code exams, the correlation between morse code and good operating habits should fall into the urban myths catagory.

Now excuse me, I need to finish polishing my Western Union model 2A I bought at the swap last weekend.

http://www.breitbart.com/news/2006/11/01/D8L4FS182.html

A Halloween night explosion shattered a window at a building housing offices for eBay's PayPal division, forcing the evacuation of dozens of employees.

PayPal spokeswoman Amanda Pires said Wednesday that the company had not received any threats but declined to comment on the investigation. The blast hit the first floor of the company's network operations center.
"We believe this is an isolated incident," she said. "We're working closely with local authorities. We have everything under control."

Business was not disrupted, but the complex was closed Wednesday and cordoned off by police tape. About 1,900 eBay and PayPal employees who work in buildings on the campus where the explosion occurred were asked to work from home or at another eBay campus in San Jose, Pires said.

No injuries were reported and no explosive device was found, but investigators determined the blast was deliberately set, Sgt. Nick Muyo said. Police had no suspects.
Investigators from the San Jose police and fire departments, the FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives were investigating.

PayPal, which provides a platform for online payments, is a lucrative division of San Jose-based eBay Inc., generating some $350 million in revenue for the online auction company in the latest quarter.

Bubbles, the word you want is spelled "gaffe" (I hope). If you really mean "gaff," why then you are speaking of either sailing gear or cross dressing garments (see http://www.samiscloset.com/gaffs.asp). As to programming, why I have forgotten more about it than you have yet to learn.

Brian, it's the usual PCTA "answer" in debate. :-)

Lacking any valid response, they resort to misdirective attempts at personal humiliation about minutae that have NO direct bearing on the SUBJECT.

Since Heil is bound and determined to find typos and misspellings, all we have to do is scrutinize HIS epic prose in here and make him wallow in his own typographical errors...forever and ever... :-)

That and the USN. The USAF and USN weren't considered as direct combat military branches by draftees worried silly about harm to their precious bodies. Back in the Vietnam War era 33 to 50 years ago, that is.

Funny thing, but the military doesn't consider amateur radio "contesting" as a useful skill in maintaining communications 24/7. Military personnel placement types

MIGHT give such recruits a nod in the direction of some communications IF (and only IF) there is a directive they have for a communications specialty.

When I enlisted in the Army, I was assigned to Signal Corps and Signal Basic Training WITHOUT being a licensed amateur and hitting only the medium percentile in the morse code aptitude test! Sunnuvagun! :-)

Oh, yeah, in March 1952 there was a definite WAR going on, but in northeast Asia, not southeast Asia. The Army had definite needs for infantry, artillery, and armor personnel replacements but I was picked for signal. My only license then was an Illinois driver license. :-)

What we got there in Heil's (altered?) version of his personal biographic factoids is strangely similar to the undetailed, grandiose CLAIMS of the former "war hero of the USMC," Major Dud (Robeson). :-)

No problem on proof for me. I've got my records and some of them are digitized (PDF for universality in viewing) from their original form. The official archives in St. Louis (NARA Military Personnel Records Center) has them for proof by anyone with access.

>Stories about the military.

Oh, my, here comes Major Dud Robeson the II. :-)

Since 54 years ago I've been acquainted with (perhaps) hundreds of military personnel both as one myself and (much longer) as a civilian. I don't know of ANY military personnel who "DIDN'T" receive any specialty training after their Basic Training (or Boot Camp for USN and USMC and USCG).

The USAF signals people have a long tradition of keeping comms alive and well 24/7 just as the Army did it (USAF came out of the Army in the later 1940s). "Getting the message through" at any time of the day or night is the watchword for both USA and USAF signals. They don't do it the "amateur way" as a HOBBY.

There IS an exception: AFRS and (later) AFRTS. A Special Services branch...entertainment (and, supposedly morale) folks in uniform. Armed Forces Radio (and Television) Service doesn't operate from combat zones, doesn't even "fight" for ratings. It is show biz.

MARS might be in the same category as AFRS-AFRTS. It was never essential to military communications despite the civilian hoopla attached to it. From the 1990s onward, MARS has taken on a communications role for most of the US government...and doing good at that...using military MARS personnel. With DSN connection to the Internet, the "boys overseas" don't need to wait for surface mail or use phone patches to talk direct to family and friends.

But...in Heil's case WE don't really know in DETAIL what Heil actually did. He hasn't described it in anything but vague generalities and intimations of work performed. To use Major Dud Robeson's "description" Heil was "in one hostile action" action. :-)

Heil sounds off real big, smug and arrogant with "facts."
Thing is, he just doesn't apply those facts factually to his own (33 to 40 year prior personal history) other than the usual claims of having "expertise" in amateur radio.
[he sounds like a verbose Blowcode in drag... :-)]

>> >>> Whole government agencies gave up on code. Commercial businesses gave >> >>> up on code.
>> >> Oracle uses a lot of code.

Heil put on his stupid face again. :-(The "code" referred to by you, by me, is COMPUTER (Instruction) "CODE."

Sigh...more MISDIRECTION into the general "code."

>> Oracle is a business which didn't give up on code.
>Bill Gates has an answer for your Oracle.

Very much so! :-) A few billion bucks here, a few billion bucks there...might even add up to real money! (paraphrasing Yogi Berra) [thanks to the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation for all their many chartitable contributions worldwide!] I just don't think Bill Gates (or Paul Allen) much give a shit for morse "code." :-)

I know and use a few high-level COMPUTER codes. I know and use a few Assembler-level COMPUTER codes. Those just ain't "morse code." :-) My little Apple][+ can do a third of a million "words per second." [based on the average number of clock cycles per byte-word instruction Ain't NO morseman that can come close to that. :-)

My current computer box is one helluva lot FASTER than that 1980-era Apple][+ and goes faster per second with 32-bit words. My dial-up connection to the Internet (usually 50 KBPS) does about 50,000 "words per minute" just with the 3 KHz bandwidth telephone line. The new set-top cable TV box we just had installed this morning (has a DVR built-in plus more cable service channels, all on digital) has an incredibly high data rate. [our Samsung 27 inch DTV accepts DTV direct from the new digital service set-top box]

But...we must all "respect and honor" the mighty morse expertise of the PCTA amateur extras because they think they typify the "state of the art" in communications mode use. Greater than 20 "words per minute!" Good grief...

1906 thinking in the year 2006. Ptui.

Tsk, Mighty Macho Morseman Miccolis will HAVE to "reply" with his "helpful correction of mistakes" a la the mighty macho morseman style of "knowing what is best for amateur radio" (as He sees it...).

True enough...and the OTHER half had to take a morse code TEST to get that AMATEUR license.

Miccolis must think the rest of us live in HIS reality (or rather ego-geographic-center-of-the-universe). In another week we Californians (about 30 million of us) will be voting on a number of state and local issues.
"Weldon and Sestak" don't seem to be on that ballot.

A mere 17 years ago there was no such thing as a "code-free" (meaning No Morse Code TEST) amateur radio license.

True enough. They don't have ONE consideration that I saw my error and posted my own correction of it.

On every 'QWERTY' keyboard there is one key with an (unshifted) apostrophe and a (shifted) double-quote.
In the shorthand version of dimensioning, a foot is denoted by the suffix of an apostrophe while an inch is denoted by the suffix of double quote. As an example, my height can be written 5' 10" or, in longer form, five feet ten inches. In rapid typing (I learned touch-typing in middle school) it is possible to make a mistake in too much pressure on the Shift key and inadvertently type in the double-quote.

But...in the Grand Inquisitor manner of the might macho morsemen, a type by an NCTA is a CAPITAL OFFENSE, punishable by a lifetime of message comments about that typo...and NEVER acknowledging that it was corrected!

I remember. Somewhere along that line, Reg Edwards' ready-togo small computer program was mentioned. Reg is a UK ham of long time and has a bunch of small programs made just for many particular amateur radio applications. If you still have a need, I'll dig out his URL and post it here. Reg appears in Art Collins? :-) Hmmm...I thought he went to ISU, not OSU.

USAF SAC was the igniter of the single-channel SSB use and Collins Radio of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, got the contracts.

Never mind that RCA Corporation ALSO got the contracts and supplied single-channel SSB on HF to the USAF. Collins had the more-savvy-PR and started selling to the commercial world and to amateurs. Collins Radio got started with Art making transmitters to-order before WW II. RCA didn't go the full-thing with television.

>Sam Morse desinged his code to be marked on a tape with a pen.

True enough and recorded history of 1844. On some history website there is a digitized image of the famous "What hath God wrought" message marked on tape. Smithsonian?

Alfred Vail, benefactor of Morse, came up with a CHANGE of "morse code" from the original all-numbers scheme to the representation of each English letter to a dot-dash combo.
About the same time Morse and the Vail railroad works just couldn't make a reliable pen mechanism.

Radio was tried in 1895 by Marconi in Switzerland, using only the presence of a radio signal. In 1896 Marconi sent simple character groups in morse code for a public demonstration in Italy. In the same year Aleksandr Popov in Russia. 1896 is FIFTY-TWO YEARS AFTER the first Morse-Vail Telegraph System debuted in Baltimore, MD. This 'morse code' thing was rather mature by 1896.

The point about 'morse code' is that it was technologically SIMPLE. An electrical circuit is either on or off. Early radio was technologically SIMPLE. Transmitters' "RF output" was either on or off. Morse code was used because the two SIMPLE things were compatible. It is total bullshit to imagine that morse code had some kind of "state-of-the-art" magic at the beginning. It was technologically CONVENIENT, established (in wireline comms), and mature (lots of morse code operators after 52 years of use worldwide).

>I've never met anyone from tha FCC. I saw Riley at Dayton. Ed Hare,

You must mean the 'Dayton Hamvention?' :-) Gotta be EXACT in everything in here lest the mighty macho morsemen try to be "helpful" with their "mistake corrections"!

Sometimes I think the ARRL confuses itself with all those "official" things it has. It's a clever descriptor for whatever they are describing, gives it some glow of 'authority.'

Of course they do. They used to be Tech Plusses, a distinctly

I said nothing about standardizing stations. YOU brought it up.

You vectored off.

It wasn't performed in front of a steely-eyed FCC examiner after a 9 hour drive uphill both ways.

It was a change that allowed people who were unwilling to put forth an effort to join the amateur service. Smaller effort means they won't value their license and start misbehaving. It's an extension of the riff-raff argument.

Look, you come on here and try to change the parameters of my "impossible" scenario, you want to tell me all about something I'm not discussing, then you tell my I'm making stuff up and telling untruths.
I don't appreciate it. If you can't behave, you'll just have to put me

I'll point out his punctuation errors a few times and let it go. What Heil is never going to forget is working out of band Frenchmen on 6 Meters. Perhaps when he passes, I start an amateur club memorializes his DX expertise and Operating prowess. It may not be in the same League as the Barry Goldwater station, but it'll be a start.

my worst area. Somehow I managed dinstinguished grad in both the 3

There were a handful of billets that were DDA. Most of the unskilled work was handled by folks getting kicked out for various non-adaptability issues.

I got to visit SAC's "Giant Talk" at Elkhorn, NE. That was so cool.
And the Navy broadcast stations on Guam. I used to receive their wx rtty and fax transmissions when in the field with the 2nd ID/ROK. Fun stuff. Later I had to rely on wx rtty only from Diego Garcia, and WEFAX from the orbiters in Somalia.

Yeh, I watched them once or twice in the ROK, probably once during each tour. I did listen to the radio, and enjoyed the "shadow" and other old-tyme boradcast stuff they would put on autopilot overnight (worked a lot and worked a lot of night shifts).

Yeh, when I was a war planner, I used to hit up the message center every morning about 6:30 AM, visit the control center, get an update on wx data flowing from our deployed locations, problems, etc. I'd brief the Colonel when he got in on the contingency locations, we'd go take the wx briefing, then head into the CINCs briefing.

MARS had nothing to do with any comm we used.

CB'ers are a dying breed also. It's getting to be you can't even find 2 models of CB radio at WalMart or the auto supply store anymore so ham bands are in no trouble. Most truckers are using FRS channel 4 for road info now, still some on Channel 19 but even that is starting to drop off with alot of them now having mobile internet links in their rigs.
I know one guy who has complete satellite TV and wireless net access in his sleeper cab via a laptop on a swinging arm righ over his bunk in the sleeper. He can e-mail or talk to the XYL in real time via a camera right from his truck.
Who needs CB and Ham rigs anymore? Many more are using NexTel to talk back to home and on the road via talkgroups.
Rest easy pal! Ham radio is in NO WAY threatened. Trust me.

Ham radio is HOPLESSELY OBSOLETE Bunkie !
It used to be a big thing 20 or 30 Years ago when the local ham could talk halfway around the world right from his basement or spare room ham shack.

Today you have 10 year olds doing the same thing thru Broadband and ISDN links via a computer.

Ham Radio is NOT NEEDED ANY MORE. Get that thru the iron plate in yer head and you'll sleep better.

How are you going to save a life with CW? If someone is having a heart attack he's not going to be steady enough to type out an SOS to you.

No planes use morse code. No ships do either. Just who do you think is going to send you an SOS?

"Minutiae", Len.

Do the terms "Mother Superior" or "Waffen SS Guy" hold any meaning for you? Do you believe them to be attempts at personal humiliation?

Oh, I'll make an occasional typo, Len. When you misuse the same term repeatedly, that isn't a typo. You do that often. Now if I were to make frequent factual errors, we'd be in the same boat.

I wasn't a draftee, Len. Nobody in the Air Force was a draftee. Nobody in the Navy was a draftee. I enlisted for four years. The minimum Navy hitch was for three. Draftees were non-volunteers who served two years.
Now what?

Oddly enough, I was not in the "amateur radio contesting" AFSC, yet my contesting skills were exactly the same skills I used in my Air Force duties.

days of my arrival at my first assignment. That was about seven-and-a-half weeks after I first entered the Air Force.

Altered version, Leonard? What has been altered? Couple that with what military personnel folks MIGHT do and you may have stumbled upon something big. Have a talk with your new pal at your local recruiting office or better yet, have Brian Burke contact those "Stolen Valor" folks.

pleasant memories.

See, Leonard, you don't know everything after all. You're about to hose it up in your typical fashion though. I never said that I never received any specialty training after basic training. I wrote that I never attended any military technical school.

That's all irrelevant, Len. Rest easy, old soldier. The Air Force's long tradition was maintained.

That's very interesting, Len. I had nothing to do with AFRS or AFRTS.

No, Len, it isn't. MARS never was show biz. I never had a MARS assignment. I've advised you of that a number of times.

That'd be one more hostile action than you've experienced in the

You needn't accept anything. Just stay on the sidelines and snipe as you've done for the past decade.

Jim has been a licensed radio amateur for decades. I'd accept his view on how best to regulate amateur radio before I'd accept the word of someone who had never obtained any class amateur radio license. Now what?

You must have missed a few lessons during that touch-typing course.
You aren't supposed to rest your fingers on any of the keys. Your John Kerry explanation doesn't wash. To type an apostrophe, your finger shouldn't have been on the shift key at all.

When you resort to a preposterous excuse for making a typo--one that is absurd to anyone who knows anything about touch-typing--you'll likely hear more about your error the more you try to explain it.

What's wrong with vanity callsigns?

Where? All I ever saw was encouragement.

And as far as "promoted way over other modes", the amount of space given to Morse Code in ARRL publications is not out of line with the mode's popularity.

A court cannot change the facts, Len. All that court decision did was to render an opinion on some patents.

So what? Is the statement correct or not?

And you didn't score near the top on the Morse Code aptitude, did you?
I think that was the start of your anti-Morse crusade.

The US Navy had higher requirements, Len.

But not the same requirements, Len. Did the Army consider one minute out of five to be a passing grade? Did the Army use multiple-choice or fill-in-the-blank Morse Code tests?

I stand by my statement.

What do you mean by that, Len?

Is it some odd slang for "made a completely true and convincing statement"?

Not at all, Len. It's the reason why such testing was done. Why else?

So what? Morse Code played an important role in both.

What Great Emotional Harm came to you as a result of the zoning change

Yes, Len. You're not involved. You're not a radio amateur and will probably never be one. You don't make, sell or buy any products for the amateur radio market, you don't write books or articles for radio amateurs, and there's no indication you'll do any of that in the future. All you do is write a few long, error-filled posts in a couple of Usenet newsgroups and spam ECFS.

Your boast about "going for Extra right out of the box" remains unfulfilled after almost 7 years.

When did I say anything like that?

Let's see your "proof", Len.

Crap like this is why I haven't gone for a ham license. I've worked in real broadcast radio and thought about taking the amateur test, but I have no desire to be in a hobby filled with childish old geezers.

Now careful there who you call an old geezer. I'm the same age as Winnie the Poo, and I too take umbrage with all the childish crud foisted upon the newsgroups by SC and others of his ilk. I'd be willing to place a wager that the SOB (Not to be implied that his name is Sweet Old Bill), is under 50 years of age and more likely, under 30. Certainly his mental age (and capacity) is less than any of my 6 great grandchildren and one of those is still in the oven.

Give the ham ticket another go. It's a great hobby despite the best efforts of that little publishing company in Connecticut, the QCWA and a few disgruntled idiots that have to have some reason to think themselves better than others even if it's only through an obsolete mechanical skill likely teachable to a reasonably smart chimpanzee.

Thanks for the reply. The problem was solved when I

1) Ran #12 wire through the 2nd-story window sill and down to a 10 feet long copper clad ground rod. The length of the wire run is about 15 feet. While this may seem to be an obvious step, at my previous QTH the use of an earth ground made RF feedback problems worse on some bands.

2) Installed an Amidon FT-240-77 ferrite toroid as a common-mode choke (11 turns) in the Orion's DC power supply cable and located about 18" from the Orion. I am using an Astron RS-35A linear power supply (the fan on the Ten-Tec switching PS was too noisy). The cable run between the power supply and the Orion is somewhat lengthy because the Orion is connected to an MFJ-1129 multi-outlet strip.

If you truly believe all that, then you should also believe that ham (Indeed, any) radio is an obsolete communications medium, since the world is now hard-wired.

And if the chimp can learn Morse, why can't aspiring hams? Morse is easy at lower speeds. Anyone who can't master it at up to 15wpm surely isn't bright enought to to be trusted with his paws on the controls of a transmitter.

The primary justification for allocation of amateur radio spectrum has always been emergency services. And in dire emergencies, operators might have to cobble together makeshift equipment. In that case, it's much simpler -- and possibly the only solution -- to build a cw transmitter than it is to come up with modulation. Hence cw has always been the ultimate disaster scenario fall-back, and should always remain a licensing requirement.

Otherwise, who needs hams, and why should they get any of the public radio spectrum?

Hi John,

Make sure to connect this in dependant ground to the service ground or you will have created an yet undiscovered new problem.

I say this because of the clue offered in your statement above about problems becoming WORSE (you probably didn't have that ground tied to the service ground then too, did you?).

What you have suggested is on my "to do" list. The run to the service ground will be quite long, however.

Brian was correct, and remains correct. Correct, correct, correct.

When a Novice renews his/her license, it is as a Novice.

When an Advanced renews his/her license, it is as an Advanced.

But when a Technician Plus renews his/her license, it is as a Technician, NO PLUS. Should a Technician want to exercise privileges previously available to the PLUS, they must produce documentation granting those priveleges.

Granted not all words are five characters long. However, in order to develop the test, the "standard" word is defined as 5 characters even though word lengths may vary. This is then used to determine the character count in the test message.

For 5 minutes of Morse Code:
At 5wpm, the character count is 125 characters
At 13wpm, the character count is 325 characters
At 15wpm, the character count is 375 characters
At 20wpm, the character count is 500 characters

The number of characters, not words, copied is the basis on which the code tests are graded if one uses the 1 minute solid copy option to pass. This compensates for the fact that not all words are the same length. For the 5wpm test, that means only 25 characters in a row need to be correctly copied. While all alphabetic characters count as one each, punctuation and prosigns count as two each due to their length.

I am an amateur radio operator and I know what I'm talking about. All former varieties of Technicians will be renewed as "Technician." Period. If the former varieties with HF privs wish to exercise those privs, THEY MUST PRODUCE DOCUMENTATION THAT IS NOT ON THEIR LICENSE AS RECEIVED FROM THE FCC.

All Novices renew as Novices, All Advanced renew as Advanced, and all Tech Plusses renew as TECHNICIANS.

Thems the facts. If you don't like it, complain to the FCC, not me. Maybe they'll change it for you to make me wrong and you right.

Mmmm...maybe the Extra's should stand up and salute when someone who can program a software programmable transceiver shows up ? An EME specialist ? Someone who builds radios ?

255. 30 helpful ham tips for no-codes and new hams like RadioGuy AKA PapaDog.

The 30 Steps below will help all No-Code Hams, it will also help you to find others just like yourself. These 30 steps should also be added to the present writtens.

Step One: Use as many "Q" signals as possible. Yes, I know they were invented solely for CW and are totally inappropriate for two meter FM, but they are fun and entertaining. They keep people guessing as to what you really meant. I.E. "I'm going to QSY to the phone." Can you really change frequencies to the phone? QSL used to mean, "I am acknowledging receipt", but now it appears to mean, "yes" or "OK". I guess I missed it when the ARRL changed the meaning. It is also best to use "OK" and "QSL" together. Redundancy is the better part of Lid-dom.

Step Two: Never laugh when you can say "HI HI". No one will ever know you aren't a long time CW rag-chewer if you don't tell them. They'll think you've been on since the days of Marconi.

Step Three: Utilize an alternative vocabulary. Use words like "destinated" and "negatory". It's OK to make up your own words here. I.E. "Yeah Tom, I "pheelbart zaphonix" occasionally myself."

Step Four: Always say "XX4XXX" (Insert your own call) "for I.D." As mentioned in Step One, anything that creates redundancy is always encouraged. That's why we have the Department of Redundancy Department. (Please note that you can follow your call with "for identification purposes" instead of "for I.D." While taking longer to say, it is worth more "LID points".

Step Five: The better the copy on two meter FM, the more you should use phonetics. Names should be especially used if they are short or common ones. I.E. "My name is Al... Alpha Lima" or "Jack.. Juliet Alpha Charlie Kilo." If at all possible use the less common HF phonetics "A4SM... America, Number Four, Sugar Mexico." And for maximum "LID points", make up unintelligible phonetics. "My name is Bob... Billibong Oregano Bumperpool."

Step Six: Always give the calls of yourself and everyone who is (or has been) in the group, whether they are still there or not. While this has been unnecessary for years, it is still a great memory test. You may also use "and the group" if you are an "old timer" or just have a bad memory. Extra points for saying everyone's call and then clearing in a silly way "K2PKK, Chow, Chow."

Step Seven: Whenever possible, use the wrong terminology. It keeps people guessing. Use "modulation" when you mean "deviation", and vice-versa.

Step Eight: If someone asks for a break, always finish your turn, taking as long as possible before turning it over. Whenever possible, pass it around a few times first. This will discourage the breaker, and if it is an emergency, encourage him to switch to another repeater and not bother you.

Step Nine: Always ask involved questions of the person who is trying to sign out. Never let him get by with just a "yes" or "no" answer. Make it a question that will take him a long time to answer.

Step Ten: The less you know on a subject, the more you should speculate about it in the roundtable. Also the amount of time you spend on the subject should be inversely proportionate to your knowledge of the subject even though you have no damn clue.

Step Eleven: Always make sure you try to communicate with only a handheld and a rubber duck antenna. Also, make sure you work through a repeater that you can hear very well, but it cannot hear you. This will put out a kind of "LID mating call": "Well, Joe, I can hear the repeater just fine here. I wonder why it can't hear me?" You will score maximum LID points if you are mobile, and with the radio lying in the passenger seat.

Step Twelve: If you hear two amateurs start a conversation, wait until they are twenty seconds into their contact, and then break in to make a call, or better yet to use the auto-patch. Make sure you keep the repeater tied up for at least three minutes. This way, once the two have re-established contact, they won't even remember what they were talking about.

Step Thirteen: You hear someone on the repeater giving directions to a visiting amateur. Even if the directions are good, make sure you break in with your own "alternate route but better way to get there" version. This is most effective with several other "would-be LIDs", each giving a different route. By the time the visiting amateur unscrambles all the street names whizzing by in his mind, he should have moved out of the range of the repeater. This keeps you from having to stick around to help the guy get back out of town, later.

Step Fourteen: If an annoying station is bothering you, make sure your other "LID" buddies have a "coded" frequency list. Even though "CODES" are strictly forbidden on Amateur Radio, it's really neat to practice "James Bond" tactics.

Step Fifteen: Always use the National Calling Frequency for general conversations. The more uninteresting, the longer you should use it. Extra points are awarded if you have recently move from an adjacent frequency for no reason. Make sure when DX is "rolling" in on 52.525 that you hang out there and talk to your friends five miles down the road about the good old CB days!

Step Sixteen: Make sure that if you have a personal problem with someone, you should voice your opinion in a public forum, especially a net. Make sure you give their name, call, and any other identifying remarks. For maximum points, make sure the person in question is not on the repeater, or not available.

Step Seventeen: Make sure you say the first few words of each transmission twice, especially if it is the same thing each time. Like "roger, roger" or "fine business, fine business". I cannot stress enough about encouraging redundancy.

Step Eighteen: If you hear a conversation on a local repeater, break in and ask how each station is receiving you. Of course they will only see the signal of the repeater you are using, but it's that magic moment when you can find a fellow "LID", and get the report. Extra points are awarded if you are using a base station, and the repeater is less than twenty-five air miles from you.

Step Nineteen: Use the repeater for an hour or two at a time, preventing others from using it. Better yet, do it on a daily basis. Your quest is to make people so sick of hearing your voice every time they turn on their radio, they'll move to another frequency. This way you'll lighten the load on the repeater, leaving even more time for you to talk on it.

Step Twenty: See just how much flutter you can generate by operating at handheld power levels too far away from the repeater. Engage people in conversations when you know they wont be able to copy half of what your saying. Even when they say your uncopyable, continue to string them along by making further transmissions. See just how frustrated you can make the other amateur before he finally signs off in disgust.

Step Twenty One: Use lots of radio jargon. After all, it makes you feel important using words ordinary people don't say. Who cares if it makes you sound like you just fell off Channel 19 on the citizen's Band? Use phrases such as "Roger on that", "10-4", "I'm on the side", "Your making the trip" and "Negatory on that".

Step Twenty Two: Use excessive microphone gain. See just how loud you can make your audio. Make sure the audio gain is so high that other amateurs can hear any bugs crawling on your floor. If mobile, make sure the wind noise is loud enough that others have to strain to pick your words out from all the racket.

Step Twenty Three: Start every transmission with the word "Roger" or "QSL". Sure, you don't need to acknowledge that you received the other transmission in full. After all, you would simply ask for a repeat if you missed something. But consider it your gift to the other amateur to give him solace every few seconds that his transmissions are being received.

Step Twenty Four: When looking for a contact on a repeater, always say your "listening" or "monitoring" multiple times. I've always found that at least a half dozen times or so is good. Repeating your multiple "listening" ID's every 10 to 15 seconds is even better. Those people who didn't want to talk to you will eventually call you, hoping you'll go away after you have finally made a contact.

Step Twenty Five: Always use a repeater, even if you can work the other station easily on simplex ... especially if you can make the contact on simplex. The coverage of the repeater you use should be inversely proportional to your distance from the other station.

Step Twenty Six: When on repeaters using courtesy tones, you should always say "over". Courtesy tones are designed to let everyone know when you have unkeyed but don't let that stop you. Say "over", "back to you" or "go ahead". It serves no useful purpose but don't worry, it's still fun!

Step Twenty Seven: Use the repeater's autopatch for frivolous routine calls... especially during morning or evening commute times. While pulling into the neighborhood, call home to let them know you'll be there in two minutes.... or, call your spouse to complain about the bad day you had at work. After all, the club has "measured rate" service on their phone line so they get charged for each autopatch call. Your endeavor is to make so many patches in a year that you cost the club at least $20 in phone bills. That way you'll feel you got your money's worth for your dues!

Step Twenty Eight: Never say "My name is ....." It makes you sound human. If at all possible, use one of the following phrases: a) "The personal here is ..." b) "The handle here is..."

Step Twenty Nine: Use "73" and "88" incorrectly. Both are already considered plural, but add a "s" to the end anyway. Say "73's" or "88's". Who cares if it means "best regards" and "love and kisses." Better yet, say "seventy thirds"! (By the way, seventy thirds equals about 23.3).

Step Thirty: If the repeater is off the air for service, complain about the fact that it was off the air as soon as it's turned back on. Act as though your entire day has been ruined because the repeater wasn't available when you wanted to use it. Even thought you have never paid a penny to help out with the upkeep of it.

Hi John,

This is classic ground-loop conditions. One ground may have an elevated potential over another ground (hard to believe, but it is the practical reality). Current flows as a consequence. This is Common Mode current (from a Common Mode potential).

You should in the short space of those three sentences be able to observe several terms that are bandied about, but rarely understood.
This is because they follow on mysterious problems that defy shielding, "grounding," and almost any other ad-hoc attempt that inevitably fails as a solution.

One classic solution for providing ground to a tower is "I let the coax shield do that!" Rarely does the operator consider that there could be a huge potential difference between that remote point's ground, and that at the house. The hidden killer here is when the operator disconnects that coax (for whatever reason) and in that act is holding the shield of the cable and some ground. He completes the circuit, and like a fuse, may blow out.

More often I've heard:
"Look at the sparks I'm drawing!"
as the coax plug's shell is brushed up against the socket mounting screws. My buddy pointed this out as the current burnt out most of his ground traces inside his rig. It only cost a couple hundred and 3 weeks down time to provide remote grounding through the coax.

That's not true.

Technicians currently make up 43.7% of US amateurs (individuals who are currently licensed). 43.7% isn't "half".

Not all of them are "code free" either. A considerable number are Technician Pluses who renewed as Technicians, upgraded Novices, and Technicians who passed Element 1.

still mistaken.

That's not true.

There are still over 34,000 Technican Pluses in the FCC database.

The Technician Plus license is being phased out. That's not the same thing as doing away with the license class. And with over 34,000 current Technician Pluses in the FCC database, it is simply not true to say "They are all Technicians now".

> > >> The Technician license has no requirement for a > > >> code exam.

Now that is true - for the basic Technician license. A Technician who passes Element 1 gets some HF privileges. A Technician who was once a Novice or Tech Plus, or whose CSCE for Element 1 is new enough, can upgrade to General without additional Morse Code testing.

In this case, that's not true. At least, not completely.

I'm an amateur radio operator, and I say you and Len are mistaken.

That's true. However, they are not all the same.

There's no reason to shout.

That's true.

However, all Technicians are not "code free".

> Thems the facts.

Not all of them.

> If you don't like it, complain to the FCC, not me.

It's not about liking it. It's about the fact that the statement

"Half of all USA licensed amateurs are licensed under a Code-Free license."

is simply not accurate.

You can shout and carry on, call names and get your buddy Len to do his thing, but the error of your statement will still exist, Brian.

Not really. Outside of MARS I can't see any military comms facilities using ham gear. Maybe an old Hammarlund SP-600 civilian HF receiver that the military bought a lot of...

"Level" terminology not understood. ?

Good on that, though. From what I've seen of WX stations, it is NOT some high school science project stuff. :-)

Infantry, artillery, and armor are the "line" units involved with direct hostile action...in case some civilian wanted to know. They take the hits right off.

Thing was, the Army thought ALL personnel were "soldiers first, specialists second." That's why we got to play sojer in da woods after our regular specialist duty hours.

As far as I'm concerned, he was just another REMF who, years later, is playing everyone as if he were the big hero in "a country at war!" [those REMFs are spotted miles away...]

I'm not. He was "in" the USAF but that's all I will accept.
That military time should have been good for his guvmint pension accumulation time, though...probably his whole plan for his future?

No doubt. Thing is, Heil could usually claim anydamnthing he wanted knowing that few in public venues of now would have been in the Air Force in Vietnam. Just like there are few amateurs who were in the State Department. Given that kind of an "audience," he can get away with all kinds of brags...and saying lots of generalities without going into specifics.

Hmmm...more "glamorous" kinds of comms than I was involved in. :-)

I would have liked to visit some of the old ACAN-DCS sites of the 1950s-1960s but most of those closed down or got very changed. Fort Deitrich in MD became a chem warfare center, no longer the central point of WAR (Washington Army Radio). The "Frisco" Army station was really more inland at Davis, CA, and has long been closed down. I understand the AFRS-VOA big station at Delano, CA, also went down. AFRTS used to have an adminstrative Hq only about a mile and a half from my house in Sun Valley, CA, but they moved that way east to an ex-USAF airfield; those buildings haven't been leased out to anyone else yet and its been like 8 years ago! [the dirt shadow of the old raised lettering of the building complex is still visible from La Tuna Canyon Boulevard] "My" old ADA site was taken over by USAF in 1963 and they ran it until 1978, then everything given back to Japanese.

SAC ain't no more now and USAF has had a rather massive reorganization of units and mission roles. One thing good is that the old "oil burner routes" aren't there in civilian aviation notices...the old SAC practice runs on "targets" similar to USSR target locations. Be thankful that MAD worked!

The "T" wasn't stuffed into 'AFRS' until after 1960? Now there's an AFRTS station on each USN aircraft carrier! :-) AFRTS can download from various comm sats and rebroadcast now, if there still are some AFRTS terrestrial stations.
Back in the 1950s AFRS depended a lot on HF relay from live USA broadcasts such as the baseball World Series. That would come in to Japan at about 2 AM the 'same day' get taped and then rebroadcast AS IF it were 'live' that afternoon.

Same with me and ACAN-DCS. However, the Tokyo MARS station got 3rd priority level for 1 KW RTTY using the FEC HQ aircraft relay transmitter. Two-down and three-down NCOs at MARS used to try and "pull rank" on the night shifts at ADA to 'demand' time on it. :-) Kind of got to be fun for me when they did, I just read off the standing orders on useage priority, the ones signed by the light bird colonel who was then battalion commander. :-) After a couple years frustration the Tokyo MARS finally got their own teeny transmitter-receiver site at their billet...but with a nice new tribander beam.

Regular message traffic was like thousands of TTYs per shift in the 1950s...running 24/7 of course. Kind of dull after the first few weeks on the job. Even in the big TTY relay room at Control (220 TTY tape units) We just made sure all the Txs were up and running, did the necessary QSYs, pulled maintenance when scheduled, checked the radio relay systems (landline backup) to make sure they worked if needed. On a rare month one Tx might go down of old age and we would do a frantic antenna connection changeover to bring up a spare Tx. Once a month the lowest-level contingency plan (a single 30 W AN/GRC-9 Tx-Rs left over from WW II would be tried from the transmitter site, manned by the only NCO there who could do morse. Each time the Rx would be so swamped by extraneous RF that the test net couldn't be heard. :-)

DSN is a LOT harder to intercept. Has to be done at DSN centers using their terminal equipment.

He implies it was something like "under fire" but that isn't the info I get from folks who worked HF comms there and not much is written up in the Army Center for Military History except NON-morse comms.

Yeah, like he wouldn't know a NOP from a JMP instruction if it bit him in the rump. :-(

Sheesh...the best Miccolis could do is crib the ENIAC museum PR stuff. :-) Gates could BUY an ENIAC out of petty cash funds. He could also buy out the whole ARRL if he desired; any corporation doing less than $15 million per annum in taxable income would be considered "very small" to him.

I'm getting pessimistic. The Living Morse Museum of Amateur Radio on HF will continue too far into the future and the code test with it. Maybe long enough to Rescue the Earth and Mankind when alien beings from the stars invade us...'rescue' using morse code! :-(

BTW, I still haven't heard of any amateur writing in here saving lives using morse code on the ham bands. Wonder why?

Oh my, a nice emotional tribute to a father by his son, son reprinting his dad's poem.

Tell us, Mighty Macho Morseman Miccolis, what YOU did in World War II in the service of your country?

Tell us what you did in ANY military branch. Tell us what you did as a civilian for the government.

Can you? I don't think so.

All you can do is crib from OTHERS' websites.

The MAJOR communications modes of World War II were RTTY and VOICE. RTTY on HF for the brunt of messaging...and to handle encrypted traffic. Voice between aircraft, between ground vehicles, between foot soldiers, between all three of those with the other two.

OOK CW was used, yes, but it was mainly by the USN. You seem oblivious to the fact that cruiser class and heavier used RTTY for command traffic and voice 'TBS' since 1940. Destroyer class and submarines used RTTY later in World War II (see a display of the 'SIGABA' at the USS Pompanito floating museum in the Bay Area...a TTY terminal modified for on-line encryption-decryption...the Pompanito is a submarine). SOME OOK CW was used in the Pacific Theater by the AAF during bombing raids over Japan...but the major comms were still VOICE between formation aircraft, plus the comms between them and "little friends" (P-51 escorts) all the way to and from Japan. SOME OOK CW was used on aircraft ferry missions, handled by specialist radiomen, but the single-engine aircraft made do with just voice.

If you are going to babble about little portable 'QRP' rigs (like the mishandled 'Pogo Stick' and the "Angry-Nine"), I'll just toss in the first handie-talkie (available in early 1940) and the famous SCR-300 walkie-talkie, the backpack VHF radio used first in Italy then in Europe since 1943. VOICE, Jimmie, the instant stuff not hampered by having to write on message forms for the local ground commander to see...who has to compose a message to send back in reply. You just don't have ANY training in foot soldiering so quit trying to sound off like you "know" stuff in an era where you didn't exist.

In the history of "Magic," the breaking of the Japanese high-level codes of 1940 to 1945, how did you think the intercepts got to Op-20-GY in DC? How do you think the decrypted intercepts were disseminated? By TTY, encrypted TTY for security. The Navy and the Army did that, the USN for HF radio relay, USA for wireline and terminal equipment.

Do you really believe a rolling tank is a good place to send-receive morse code? Try it some time. Ride a tank. Ride a Bradley. Ride a true OFF-ROAD SUV and do it. In World War II the armor units used VOICE. Wasn't no time to futz around playing morseman when some enemy in another tank is out to destroy you. You just don't have time for retries in such situations.

Did you think fighter pilots in a furball were going to do air-air comms in morse? At 200 to 300 Knots airspeed? You'd be nuts to think so. The medium and heavy bombers had gunners-first, specialties-second. The radio ops on B-17s and B-24s were mainly gunners, sometimes having to replace regular gunners in other positions. Bombardiers and navigators (both commissioned officers) had to do double-duty as gunners. The pilots relied on VOICE over their Command Sets to keep a formation intact.

You can go over to the Army Center for Military History website and read a bunch of documents on land signals operations, find out that TTY was still a mainstay for written comms after 1942, VOICE for the field telephones, VHF-UHF radio relay for both (even DURING the famous Battle of the Bulge)...check out the land war in the Pacific and find out much the same.

Even DURING World War II the days of manual morse code were beginning to diminish. It went completely out for comms in less than a half century afterwards. But, not to worry, for radio history you can always go to the ARRL and get THEIR version, the one glamorizing beeping during World War II. Was the ARRL IN WW II? Too long ago for just about all the Newington staff and Directors. YOU were never in the military service so you just don't know squat about the time you didn't exist.

As always to you, ByteBrothers famous phrase invoked.

It takes too much time and too much effort to bang it into your morse-conditioned brain. You are too confirmed a Believer.

You CAN begin to realize YOURSELF by checking out electronics and radio history done by organizations OTHER than the ARRL.
Try the privatized frequency coordinators of non-amateur

US radio services. Try LISTENING to HF without turning a deaf ear to anything but morse beeping. Try going out on ships and private watercraft, see if there are morse rigs on them now. Try going into civil aircraft of now and see if there are any morse rigs in them.

Yes. Long ago there was a minimum time for "CW" that had

You NEVER see anything wrong with the ARRL. :-)

Prove your point. Read everything ever printed by the ARRL and then Poll every US radio amateur. Come back when you have some results.

Tsk, tsk, tsk...you keep saying I am always "mistaken" or "incorrect." You should not try to change the subject so readily since YOU have NO experience with military aptitude tests.

You are MISTAKEN. You are in ERROR.

But, you were NEVER in the military, were you? YOU never had to go through all those new recruit things, did you?

I never took the Field Radio course when I was in. My MOS and training was in Microwave Radio Relay. However, I DID learn *while*in* the military a number of things about other MOSs.

> I stand by my statement.

You ought to lie down. Since you were never in any military you have NO direct experience with military communications.
You have no standing.

"Crapped:" Colloquial term said to be derived from the dice game, also synonymous with ejecting too much feces. It means you told an unsupportable factoid out of your imagination.

You have NO direct knowledge of such "testing" and NO experience in any military. Sigh. You just can't understand any radio history unless the ARRL spoon-feeds it to you...

Other than the ARRL's own words on it, it should be found in the FCC Reading Room or wherever the FCC keeps documents.

Maybe I have mistaken you for that Waffen SS guy who writes

But, you say I will NEVER be a radio amateur. You can, of course, TELL THE FUTURE? Of course. You passed the high-rate amateur radio morse test that enables you to Do Anything! :-)

That hasn't a single thing to do with AMATEUR RADIO POLICY.

Tsk, tsk, tsk...you are busy, busy, busy trying to MANUFACTURE some kind of "unethical, immoral SIN" about neighbors together to preserve the zoning laws that were present when their HOMES were built? :-)

Do you live in your radio? Do you live in your radio bands?

You said that "some of us [yourself and others] live in the bands." Is that true or not?

[DON'T say "I never said that." You did.]

NONE of MY neighbors live in their radios or "on the bands."
One of them IS a licensed radio amateur. Another one is a licensed Commercial radio operator. The other few hundred have varying occupations. All of us live in our homes, pay taxes, have incomes that support keeping our homes. We all expect our homes to be used as dwellings, for shelter, for security, for raising families, for having visitors, for enjoying LIFE itself.

WE (the neighborhood association) are not SHEEP to meekly accept whatever orders and direction we are told. WE had ample opportunity to democratically object at a public meeting several times. Now, at the time, NONE in my neighborhood association were home builders. Yet, we could OBJECT freely and openly. YOU, with your absolute faith in amateur regulations of your youth, bought into the ideas of then and now RESIST change to bring the ARS regulations up to the NOW if not the future. You are like the sheep.

Now, opening zoning laws to permit multi-family dwellings (legalspeak for 'apartments') we would DECREASE the monetary value of our HOMES for the future and DECREASE the area of our neighborhood in general for the future. That isn't "progress" for the future as you termed it. We didn't want to increase a single builder's fortune at the expense of ours for our future.

That ONE builder got what he wanted, FAILED to get loans to permit construction, and had to sell his ownership to another construction corporation. THAT corporation took great pains to meet with our neighborhood organization and did NOT build apartments. Single-family dwellings were built in a Walled Community, 44 homes within a literal wall and with an entrance gate. The value of our homes has since increased both in value for resale but not for our real estate taxes. It was win-win in the end for us in our neighborhood.

That is all recorded history in Los Angeles County. Sorry, but the ARRL has taken no interest in the matter. :-)

YOU seem terribly upset by all of that. YOU do NOT live out here, about 3K miles away. You do NOT know the full circumstances of what happened out here. You were NOT here then or afterwards. But, you feel COMPELLED to go on and on and on about it. Why?

I know why. You NEED to act the character assassin, to impossibly connect disparate dots in a vain effort to "prove" something BAD about me!

Any other reason you have in trying to equate amateur radio regulations with regional urban zoning laws is INSANE.

> Yes, Len. You're not involved.

Only if you and other PCTAs say so. :-)

>You're not a radio amateur and will probably never be one.

You CAN know the future, ey? :-)

> You don't make, sell or buy any products for the

We are all required to "report to you on what we expect to do in the future?"

You have delusions of god-hood.

Now, now, you aren't being nice...

Six-plus. It's not like you NOT to be exact. :-) Okay, I changed my mind. Or do you ALLOW that? :-)

I did not swear an oath before a magistrate in here long ago. It isn't binding in any way. :-)

Tsk. YOU are not the ONLY user of the EM environment. :-) Amateurs get only a SMALL portion of the EM spectrum...be thankful for what you do have.

You are GUILTY by INTENT, Jimmie Noserve, by THOUGHT, by IMPLICATION, by malice aforethought, premeditated. All to keep your precious code test for future amateurs...because that is YOUR personal desire. A personal desire unthinking of future radio hobbyists whom you've never met, whom you know nothing. You want to FORCE them to do YOUR wishes.

amateur radio licenses in order to REGULATE US amateur radio.

Tsk, that's why the Waffen SS guy is called that. He wants a summary firing squad for every NCTA that makes typos.

Don't forget "downloading firmware" for his Orion. :-)

Der Waffen SS guy ate too many Ding-Dongs. Now HE is a "chime

To reiterate what has been said by others...
There are two issues here for your elevated ham shack... RF ground and AC/DC ground... Not the same critters and in your case one will not do both jobs...

First, for life and limb you need an AC/DC connection to the service panel, i.e. local electrical ground... Length of this does not matter... Second you need an earth ground as close to the rig as you can get... As I read this you have dropped wire out the window to a ground stake... Excellent, now get busy and continue on with that ground wire also along the edge of the house to the electrical service panel ground...

Now for the really important stuff, i.e. working DX, you need an RF ground... In your case I suggest that you use a quarter wave length insulated wire for each band you operate, attached to the common ground behind the rig... Hang or fan them out the window, run them through the ceiling to the attic, run them around the walls of the room, run them down the hall behind the baseboard, just whatever you can do to spread them out as long as possible .... Grounding a quarter wave radial at the far end is not a good idea... Tape the end so no one can touch the bare wire and leave it... That should cool off your RF problems...

To iterate what I have reported earlier. The problem was SOLVED, for the bands I operate on, when I :
1) Ran #12 wire through the 2nd-story window sill and down to a 10 feet long copper clad ground rod. The length of the wire run is about 15 feet. (Let me worry about satisfying the "code" requirement of bonding this ground rod to the rod at the power service entrance.)

2) Installed an Amidon FT-240-77 ferrite toroid as a common-mode choke (11 turns) in the Orion's DC power supply cable and located about 18" from the Orion. http://tinyurl.com/qnzs3 The cable run between the power supply and the Orion is somewhat lengthy because the Orion is connected to an MFJ-1129 multi-outlet strip.

I thank you for your support.

Why do No-coders always break down in the middle of an argument and start spewing profanities? I just don't understand it. It must be do to limited mental abilities, and bad CB operating habits.

Opus being a canuck probably doesn't help much either.

And it's all some alpha-hotel hams!

I find that people who will sit behind a microphone and talk to strangers to be the same type of people no matter if they're hams or CB'ers.

I find myself turning my CB on just to hear people that don't run their mouth from the same script every time they key their mike and to talk to people without that "holier then thou" attitude.

Now put that in your pipe and smoke it!

Yup! The stupidest thing I hear. It's a CW abbreviation for laughing!
Just f'ing laugh if you say something funny. The guy that always says that doesn't even know code and he always uses the same script.

I'd give him grief, but he's not the sharpest tool in the shed, and he genuinely wants to be helpful, helps the old folks and all.
He means well, so I leave him be.

Why would voice not work? Just one possible scenario. Let me see, the guy who needs help while climbing Mt. Rainier in WA could use his QRP rig, which has a mic, to instead send CW to Denmark, and hope that they know what county Mt. Rainier is in WA, so that they can dispatch the help he needs. Makes perfect sense to me.

SC, you truly are a moronic fucktard. Find a better argument. This one doesn't hold water. You keep waffling between this one, and your true colors of keeping anyone who chooses not to learn code off of HF. Personally, and the consensus agrees, HF would be much better without you.

2 meter simplex can sound a lot like CB. Repeaters are way too stuffy.
Now 440 only repeaters are a different story. Whole 'nother crowd.
I guess 6 meters will have a different crowd. That's the only neat thing ham radio has going for it, if you don't like one band, just go to another. CB is just another band of frequencies and a group of folks that use it. Each band is unique.

I've never said one has to abandon CB for HAM or vise-versa.

No one group has the market cornered on stupidity! :)

My personal opinion is that it's a conflict of interest for FCC staff to hold amateur radio licenses.

Straight key? It's highly unlikely. Maybe with a keyboard and CWGet.

That's so sad. Anyone else can read past a typo and still ket the message. Dave trips over a typo and skins his knee key.

I like 1973, no matter what Jim thinks or says. And until we get or MIA's and POW's all back, I think it's still an open matter.

1, 3, 5, 7, 9 level

1 is a graduate of basic training. 9 is full performance level for a careerist.

Military wx personnel are a lot more competent than what you're seing on television. I don't know where those guys come from although most of them have collitch degrees in meteorology. Our biggest challenge as Airmen and NCO's was to retrain LTs and Capts in standardized methods.

The only homegrown WX that the Army has are the ARTYMET guys. They run up PIBALs for wind speeds and directions for calculating trajectory.
The rest of the weather on Army installations and deployed are USAF.
That's how I ended up with 2ID.

You gotta believe me when I say that all us USAF guys were thrilled with USA assignments...

I recall geting woke by the armory saying I had to come down and clean my dirty weapon. I was between 12 hour midshifts when the call came in, so I was lacking a sense of humor. I called them back and told them my weapon was clean, read me the weapon number. Yep, it was my weapon. So I put on my uniform and went down there. Gave em my weapon card, and they handed be a filthy rifle, not just powder residue, but sand and mud, too. I asked them not to hand out my weapon to anyone but me from now on. Probably a direct duty MOS.

Said he lives in a tar paper shack in WV. That doesn't sound like bragging, and it's something I can believe.

FWIW, I think the state dept was merely a vehicle for dxpeditions, not a significant grab for a fat pension.

My favorite is his brag about working out of band Frenchmen on 6M.

Constantly changing antenna lengths and orientation. We used a lot of Alden 9315TR and TRT's. And WEFAX or HRPT strip imagery. We did have a setup in a comm van for wx intercept that never really worked that well, and tons more expensive than the Aldens.

Then we got a dedicated Tactical Automated Weather Distribution System (TAWDS) that had a bank of HF transceivers, modems, and a Nye Viking telegraph key. Nobody knew what the key was for.

As I was leaving the service, Harris Corp in Melbourn was building us a tactical DMSP terminal. I made a fdew trips to Melbourne and Ft Gillem to review its progress. Funny thing, I think the great big DMSP vans were originally "tactical."

I arrived in ROK in 1979, and the switch at Fuchu was in use for wx comms.

Reorganization was the only way to manage the 50+% drawdown. By reorganizing the AF at the same time as the drawdown, it kept everyone confused. We didn't notice if we were screwed up because we were hemmoraging people, or if we were screwed up because the reorg plan was bad.

Strategic Air Command is now called Strategic Command or StratCom for short. They lost almost all of their tankers to Military Airlift Command/MAC, renamed Air Mobility Command/AMC. Tactical Air Command /TAC was renamed Air Combat Command/ACC. I guess they put all their thought into the new name for ACC.

Yep, same deal with TV in the Pacific. I heard people complain that if they read the Stars and Stripes, it would ruin the outcome of the game that we be televised about a week after the fact.

Sorry, Brian, your statement is as false as Len's. I didn't write any such thing. Len purports to quote me. I've not written that I "saved the day" or did I write "syncronize his RTTY's". Now we have Len falsely claiming something and you backing him up.

It looks as if the Old Organ Grinder and his red-hatted monkey are back in business.

No, you don't know and Len is busy with more falsehoods like "big hero in 'a country at war'". What is really peculiar is Len's spouting off about rear echelon anything. After all, that exactly where he spent his time in the military.

Len's statement makes him look quite foolish. Better than a decade passed between the end of my time in the Air Force and the beginning of my employment with the Department of State.

It resulted in good pay, world travel, a chance to put some rare spots on the map and a modest pension. Len Anderson was no more involved in my employment than he is in amateur radio.

At no time did I brag about working out-of-band French stations on any band. I am not responsible for checking the band allocation of any station I work. That matter rests with the responsible licensing authority in that station's country. Live with it.

Len likes to write things like "he implies". I implied no such thing at any time. The fact is that Len doesn't know what I did and he is fishing.

The information isn't hard to come by on the web. If Len can't find it, he'll have to stay in the dark.

384. Still Searching For Homobrew

My earlier query has gone unanswered. I asked for input on how or where to find "Homobrew" and the query still stands.
Many questions come to mind and my interest has been piqued. Is "Homobrew" a micro brewery recipe aimed toward bisexuals? I recall fondly my days of the sex filled basement activities my boyfriend, Mark Misfit sponsored when he was living with me. It was Bend Over Billy!
He and I bought drinks for our fellow Twinkies, but never called them Homobrew.
I was the slurper and Mork was the slurpee...

Is Homobrew a byword for distilled spirits that Closet Queens partake of? Mork had another use for our draft beer. He'd take a can of Miller Lite, warm it in my microwave, bend over and pour twelve ounces into his upraised butt. The guy has always been strange.

Call me, Mork. You know where to reach me on The Hill.

Dave, you're free to set the record straight. Exactly what did you

And about your punctuation, this isn't an Oracle database. Put your

That is not true.

The problem is that you can't explain it.

I've done that, Len. The ARRL is not a major source of "radio history" to me.

Why? What do they have to do with amateur radio policy?

I've listened to HF since the mid 1960s, Len. Both the amateur bands and other services' bands. Lots of Morse Code and other modes on the amateur bands.

What's your point?

Old stuff, Len. If it's so obvious, why hasn't FCC eliminated Element 1? Why didn't they just drop it in the summer of 2003?

Could it be that FCC may be rethinking the issue? Or maybe they're just bogged down reading hundreds of pages of comments?

That's not true.

You are often mistaken, or incorrect. Not "always".

I stated:

"The military aptitude testing was done to find those who could learn the fastest and reach the highest levels of skill in the least time."

Is that statement correct or not?

Did you score near the top? I think not.

Are you on an anti-Morse crusade? That's pretty clear.

The subject was about military radio telegraphers. Is the US Navy not part of "the military"?

Why? Is my statement incorrect?

By that logic, since you have never been a radio amateur, you have NO direct experience with amateur radio communications. You have no standing.

How so?

Why would the US military do Morse Code aptitude testing in wartime if they didn't need large numbers of Morse Code skilled radio operators for WW2?

You're avoiding the issue, Len. It's not about me. It's about whether my statement is correct. I think you know it is correct, but won't admit it.

Yes, it does. It's a clear analogy to how rules changes happen.

Where have I written anything like that, Len? That's your guilt and shame coming out, not anything from me.

You tried to stop a change in your neighborhood's zoning regulations because you thought it was a bad change. You think that was A Good And Right Thing To Do.

Many radio amateurs are trying to stop a change in the amateur radio regulations because they think it is a bad change. Yet you criticize them.

See the hypocrisy and double standard of your behavior?

> Do you live in your radio? Do you live in your radio bands?
> You said that "some of us [yourself and others] live in the

Where did I say that? Show me.

You've claimed I wrote that, but you can't show us where or when I did.
You are either mistaken or being deceptive.

If I really wrote that, show us. Prove me wrong by quoting where I wrote the phrase you quoted. You quoted it with the " symbol, meaning a direct, verbatim quote.

> Is that true or not?

I can't confirm what I didn't write.

How does that have anything to do with resisting change to zoning laws?
Or forcing change to amateur radio regs?

> WE (the neighborhood association) are not SHEEP to meekly

Neither are radio amateurs "sheep" who have to accept what you propose.

> WE had > ample opportunity to democratically object at a public

But you lost. The change happened over your objections.

In a true democracy, the majority opinion counts for something. Your neighborhood's majority was overridden, wasn't it? Do you think that was democracy in action?

In the comments to the FCC, the majority of comments were to retain at least some Morse Code testing. Do you think that majority opinion should be overridden? Do you think that would be democracy in action?

> Now, at the time, NONE in my > neighborhood association were home builders. Yet, we could > OBJECT freely and openly.

Because you were land owners and residents. That's the key factor - land ownership and residency, not whether you were builders or not. Did that objection stop the change?

The analogy with amateur radio is equipment manufacturers vs. licensed radio amateurs.

> YOU, with your absolute faith

Yet another untruth, Len.

I think you're really talking about yourself.

With your absolute faith in the zoning regulations of your youth, bought into the ideas of then and now resisted change to bring the zoning regulations up to the present if not the future. You and your neighbors are like the sheep. Classic case of "Not In My Back Yard" (NIMBY).

I think in your case, it was literally behind your back yard, wasn't it?

> Now, opening zoning laws to permit multi-family dwellings > (legalspeak for 'apartments') we would DECREASE the monetary > value of our HOMES for the future

Whoa there!

Who was it that wrote:

"You can, of course, TELL THE FUTURE? Of course."

why, it was you, Len!

How do you know the proposed change would decrease the monetary value of your homes?

And was the proposal for apartment houses? Single family residences with attached apartments? Townhomes? Condos? Mixed development?

Or did you just not want anything other than the little boxes on the hillside of the 1960s?

> and DECREASE the area of > our neighborhood in general for the future.

How? The land would still be there.

If you wanted the land to remain undeveloped, why didn't you buy it? The developer owned the land, didn't he?

> That isn't
> "progress" for the future as you termed it. We didn't want > to increase a single builder's fortune at the expense of ours > for our future.

Here's that quote again:

"You can, of course, TELL THE FUTURE? Of course."

Seems to me that you view the possible loss of house value as Great Emotional Harm.

> That ONE builder got what he wanted, FAILED to get loans to

Why a wall?

Is the wall to keep the residents in? Or to keep outsiders out?

> The value of our homes has since increased both in value > for resale but not for our real estate taxes. It was win-win > in the end for us in our neighborhood.

You don't know what would have happened if the first developer had built on the property. And the building of those new homes did "DECREASE the area of our neighborhood in general for the future."

> That is all recorded history in Los Angeles County. Sorry, but > the ARRL has taken no interest in the matter. :-)

The point is that you resisted a change you thought was bad. Yet you criticize radio amateurs for resisting a change they think is bad.

> YOU seem terribly upset by all of that.

How? I'm not shouting and carrying on like you do. I'm not upset at all. You are.

> YOU do NOT live out here, about 3K miles away.

Check a map. I think you have overstated the distance...

So what? I might want to move out there to retire. One of your neighbors might be a relative of mine, too. I have a considerable number of relatives, Len, with a variety of last names.

You are not a radio amateur. You are about as involved in Amateur Radio as I am in Los Angeles county real estate.

You tried to stop a change in your neighborhood's zoning regulations because you thought it was a bad change. You think that was A Good And Right Thing To Do.

Many radio amateurs are trying to stop a change in the amateur radio regulations because they think it is a bad change. Yet you criticize them.

No, Len.

It's an analogy.

I think you don't like my real-estate analogy because of what it proves.

Let's see your proof of any of that.

Is personal desire a bad thing?

It was your personal desire to keep your neighborhood unchanged. A personal desire unthinking of future residents whom you've never met, of whom you know nothing. You wanted to force them to do your wishes, meet your requirements, or live someplace else.

> A personal desire unthinking
> of future radio hobbyists whom you've never met, whom you know

'of whom you know nothing'

> You want to FORCE them to do YOUR wishes.

You tried to stop a change in your neighborhood's zoning regulations because you thought it was a bad change. You think that was A Good And Right Thing To Do.

Many radio amateurs are trying to stop a change in the amateur radio regulations because they think it is a bad change. Yet you criticize them.

See the analogy - and the problem?

> As always to you, ByteBrothers famous phrase invoked...

Is that the phrase "Do as I say, not as I do"? Because that's what you're telling us, Len.

I'm pretty sure that's what I said. If you want to debate it, you'll have to look in the archives and repost it.

He IS involved in the ARS. He seems content to give the FCC the comments that they've asked for re the ARS.

Some people's claim to fame leaves me scratching my head. One's claim to fame is that he out-assholed Robesin, another's is working out of band Frenchmen on 6M. Go figure.

Fishing is fun, and it's a little like gambling. You never know when you're going to get lucky. A lot of time you get lucky when you're not even fishing. Like Robesin's "eating his excrement" remark...

I have "a" question regarding "Canada". I went to McDonalds last night and when I bought a meal, they had something referring to a "survey" listed - they wanted folks to participate in and have chances to win prizes. In that text, they made mention of "Canadians" being welcome also - except for the Providence of Quebec - I believe. BUT - they had also stated someting to the effect that the "Canadians" had to submit to a "special skills question". What the hell is up with that? Is McDs claiming Canadians are stupid? I'm curious as to WHAT type of "special skills question" AND WHY? That text made NO mention of Americans having to be subjected to the same "skills". Why didn't they include say China, Japan, Russia, etc.... where other McDs may be? Why not the Americans? WHY single out the Canadians?

That has to be one of the "dumbest" things I've ever heard of - and for a "major" corporation to be doing so - is downright weird as hell. It wouldn't surprise me if the Canadians started to "Boycott" McDs. I sure wouldn't blame them!

McDs, not only have I been growing tired of your food and last night may have been my last visit, now you're going to chase people away with your "Bias". THAT was PLAIN IGNORANT.

Perhaps because, as in many states in the US, drawings are concidered gambling and are illegal so they make it a legal contest by asking who is buried in Grant's tomb and pick the winner from the correct answers.

Perhaps because, as in many states in the US, drawings are concidered gambling and are illegal so they make it a legal contest by asking who is buried in Grant's tomb and pick the winner from the correct answers.

You "could" be right, but it still seems weird, in that you're not "technically" gambling. Just "replying" to a "survey" and are made eligible to win prizes by doing so. I guess it is a matter of how thin you want to split the hair.

It cramps HAMS too! That can be a good thing. :)

The Gov in this state has realized the usefulness of HAM radio in emergencies, and is working on a bill to allow hams to erect resonable antennas to help out.

I could put up an 11 meter antenna and say it's for 10.

Also, now the Red Cross wants background checks from mybackgroundcheck.com and that is causing one big stink!

...ah but not in those EXACT words! :-)

Way, way back in RRAP time, back when DejaNews had the archives of newsgroups, Heil tried to "explain" his use of "CW" from some small embassy in Africa (in the middle of the continent, Heil doesn't like the phrase "middle Africa" for some reason). His "explanation" was that the TTYs had to be "synchronized." I told him that teleprinters had always been designed to be SELF-synchronizing, even gave some references for the basic principles of teleprinters, one of which was a USN teaching manual that could be found in technical libraries. Heil tried to turn that around as say his "schedules" had to be synchronized...but never bothered to get into any technical details of teleprinters. [if he wanted to write SCHEDULES as in times and frequencies, all he needed to say was "skeds" which is not confined to amateur radio use] The excuse was that the frequencies that State used weren't good enough to use RTTY but manual OOK CW did work. He bragged on that as being "good" (for him)...essentially "saving the day" for his station at the time. [colloquial expression is something that Heil apparently doesn't like to use] The time frame for this 'experience' of his was approximately in the 1980s.

Note that I put "saved the day" in quotation marks. That does NOT mean (according to Miccolis) that it is an EXACT quote, but rather an all-purpose marker; Google doesn't use italics which could have done the marking and not all browsers support italics. Heil (and Miccolis) want to argue the bejesus out of EXACT words, AS IF they never ever said that, implied that, or even came close to it. :-)

The 1980s isn't exactly in the "old pioneering days" of radio. The Department of State wasn't exactly working with Spark Tx and crystal set Rx equipment. A half century BEFORE that the government and commercial users of HF were actually using TTYs over radio (mostly at HF) and a wealth of experience was acquired by all (not just at State) with RTTY and multi-channel SSB (carrying many TTY circuits). That was IN the general area of the equatorial tropics as well as in more northern and southern areas which didn't experience as many troubles as the tropics.

As do I...but the whole point of their "cleverness" seems to be directed at ARGUING their precious points and attempting to "win" some on-line back-and-forth by any means possible.

Take Heil as an example: Who else in here has been in the State Department? NONE have claimed that. With the LABEL of an important federal arm of the government, Heil can pull off whatever snow jobs he wants on the newsgroup; nobody here has the background to contradict him...he thought. It was an ideal environment for snow jobs. Problem was, there's been a few of us with REAL radio experience in HF and other parts of the EM spectrum...and some of us KNOW about the various OTHER government-military comms that have and are being used. The average radio amateur would "know" only what he/she read in ham publications.

"Major Dud" Robeson tried snow-jobbing the RRAP with his grandiose claims of "USMC" active duty service for years. Same-O-Same-O kind of snow job. Robeson got shot down by a REAL USMC veteran, one who DID supply document scans and personal photographs. Robeson NEVER did that during the many years he tried his bluffing snow jobbery in here.

It MUST to deploy effectively and achieve its mission. There is NO time to hay-wire some kind of comms gear.

BTW, those Hammarlund receivers were used in USAF-manned listening posts in northern Japan in the 1950s according to a retired USAF MSgt named Bob Humble.

I HOPE so! :-)

Since L.A. is a "saturated" TV broadcast area, there's lots of "weathermen" on the tube. My wife and I take an average of the weather predictions and hope for the best on the next day...they are all off one way or another on their predictions. Can't get the NOAA VHF weather broadcasts well in these hills.

the ARRL still pushing PR about all the amateurs in uniform

:-) More than you might think. "Oil burner routes" were marked on the small-format NOTAMs (NOtices To AirMen) for civilians as advisories to stay clear of certain areas above a specified altitude. Curiosities for me as a not-very-long

Tsk, even if the EXACT QUOTE is presented to you, you will on the subject.

No. You are MISTAKEN. You made an ERROR. You are WRONG.

Google doesn't accept italics. As a result, double-quote marks are used for a variety of uses in writing here.

Double-quote marks are NOT SOLELY descriptive of "quotations."

Either ANSWER the amateur radio policy subject or quit the misdirection into punctuation use.

No. You are MISTAKEN. You made an ERROR. You are WRONG.

If you think you "made" the law, be specific and present proof that you did do so.

No. You are MISTAKEN. You made an ERROR. You are WRONG.

Federal regulations are NOT closed to the public. US amateur

I know considerable about US amateur radio, know several radio amateurs personally, have written for an amateur radio periodical as both contributor and editor.

US amateur radio is NOT a secret society. It is not a

That occurs often. It may have something to do with Quebec regulations on the issue f draws. At the very least, participants cannot be employees of the company or their family members.

BUT - they had also stated someting to the

It's not the fault of McDonalds but it is a Canadian statute. Any Canadian entering a draw is usually required to answer a time-limited skill-resting question usually a simple mathematical question.

the original 9913 has a 9.5ga solid copper center conductor, the center conductor has a spiral wrapped standoff insulator, a thin solid dielectric layer then foil and braid shield. the od is .405" so it can't be easily distinguished from regular rg8 without looking inside. though if it is the original good stuff i would expect it to be well marked on the outside since not just everyone made it. the problem is that there have been many variations over the years on 9913, including stranded center conductors and some variations in dielectrics.

Assuming that's true, why do you care? Not that I think you've given up your vocation in lying (you must work for the Bush administration), but giving you the benefit of the doubt for a moment.

The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Don't worry about saturation. CB'ers think over saturation produces a better sounding signal. Of course, on ham radio we would call them Lids.

you must....

That's about the time all Morse Code testing should have ended. Maybe a decade too late.

Jim and Dave purposely misunderstand. Like when they trip and stagger around and eventually fall down and skin their knees over a mere type.
It's all an act; a very, very bad act. Maybe they make some side money doing that at grocery stores where there might be spilled milk on aisle seven.

On-line points aren't worth having.

Dave learned to keep quiet about himself fairly early on. The out-of-band Frenchmen fiasco is probably just the tip of the iceberg.
His "contributions" of late are not contributions at all.

I thought the beer enema thing was only a joke, but if you really do insert a long neck bottle of Bud Markie, you are sick, sick, sick.

You bring a whole new meaning to the phrase 'beer fart'.

You would think, wouldn't you, that Mark would prefer to keep that part of his life out of the public view. Obviously Mark has no shame and continues to exhibit his rather odd, off-the-wall character traits.
It is little wonder he is the laughingstock of Usenet.

Dang, first real response I've seen in a while. I delete all messages and

Hello Scott

You've haven't had fun 'till you've used a bunch of linked repeaters on different bands. Our megaplex repeater has a large number of ports that cover 10 meters (FM of course), 6 meters, 2 meters, 220, 440, 900, and 1.2 GHz. Nothing like talking to an Aussie as if he were also on a handheld next door. Talk about sweet audio ;) Oh yes, England too ...

You are also right .... no need to exclude either ham or cb (nor MURS either, come to think of it LOL).

Um ... nor FRS for that matter, but the range is a bit limited LOL.

SC is a hoot. I enjoy his comments.

Slow Code at least garners a few laughs along the way.

Mark can only elicit tortured groans from those who have not already killfiled him.

and you are a crimnal

Now, Mark. Be sure to pay Slow Code the respect he deserves. When he enters the room it is YOUR job to jump to your feet and yell, "Ten HUT!" Then you and the rest of your no code cohorts must stand at attention until Slow Code says, "At ease." And don't forget...you and the rest of the no-coders can only sit when Slow Code says, "Take your seats."

Oh, but I am! I am a vibrant, intelligent and Code Tested person! I would invite you to join me some afternoon on 17M, but that is out of the question for you. All you can do is listen....

Of course I will not require you to come to attention when I enter the room. In fact, I would probably not even acknowledge your presence.

Say, Mark. Not to be personal, but when you do the beer enema thing, do you vigorously shake the bottle, uncap it and shove it?

On second thought? Leave the cap on the beer bottle when you shove it. Those sharp, serrated edges may just pull a few of you hemmorhoids out upon withdrawal. Granted, you might end up sitting on your little inflatable donut pillow for a few days, but who cares? You could always borrow a Tampon (with string) from Roger and insert it to staunch the blood flow.

Morkie lies again. We're not "beer drinking buddies", but, unlike you, Slow Code is welcome to stop by my QTH for a cold one or a hot cup Brain has a hard time SPELLING CB let alone using one.

Brain can't get his facts about the service he's licensed to operate in right, I doubt he's much better at CB radio.

Nada. Zilch.

Now, Mark, since I am a Code Tested Amateur I fully expect you to render the correct Ham Radio Courtesy as required by Slow Code. Remember this. You need not salute me or Slow Code when inside a building unless you have your "cover" on. To not render the proper courtesy when due will result in either Slow Code or myself ordering you to "drop and give me twenty-five."
Of course a few laps around the CW key may be in order, too.

"as always" WHAT, fatboy?

It's bad enough when literate people have to struggle through your poorly written, foul and mistyped dribble, but it's even WORSE when the words you DO spell correctly don't even make the least little bit of sense in the context of the reply.

Hi Jim! Glad to see a sane voice back here.

Did you ever get out west and work the old ZIA Net?

I've not been farther west than Dallas since 93 and don't know if it's even still up or not, but I remember being able to access ZIA from about Midland/Odessa, TX, and having reliable Q's to all over the Southwest, up to about Bishop, CA. Made for comfortable driving in those days.

Hey mud-for-brains...If you'd realize that Mother Nature intended that particular orifice to be a one-way device, you wouldn't have any pain in there!

Goodness Gracious! Are you telling Mark that his sphincter is NOT a two way street?
Apparently he's had a lot of "traffic" in that area.

That's the decade that got the push for the No-Code-Test Technician class. Yurp already had the "T-hams" but, once again, the USA lagged behind the rest of the world.

The "big issue" at the ARRL site now is the Zook and Green petitions all about changing the periodicity of ham transmission IDs! Wow, "state-of-the-art" Importance to ham life! :-(

Gosh and gee whilikers, Brian, I KNOW that... :-(

But, it is fascinating to watch them desperately resorting to such things. :-) They sure as hell don't have any good compelling reason to KEEP the code test other than their very-precious personal desires. All they have left for replies on the subject are the babblings over typos.

>I could use a DXpedition to Coca Cabana.

Well, the Copa Cabana closed a number of years ago out here.

There's "Coca" site at Rocketdyne's Santa Susannah Field Test Laboratories...where all the SSMEs for Shuttle get tested. You have to join Rocketdyne Division of Boeing to gain admittance there. :-)

Imogene Coca passed on a few years ago (Sid Ceasar's female partner on "Your Show of Shows" on NBC many moons ago).

About all that's left is Coca Cola. :-) before he was conceived.

Sure...provided it is the same as WW II surplus. :-)

I'd like to see Heil struggle with a hopset entry to a PRC-119 SINCGARS R/T. :-) Major functions of that most-produced military set (quarter million made, fielded since 1989) are handled through the touch-screen entry pad.

Not any more in the Army. A sort-of MOS numeric nomenclature first came into the Army in 1955. That year I went from a 1419 (microwave radio relay) to 281.6 (same thing but the point-six was a designator of supervisor which I was).
About a decade and a half ago, the Army adopted the two-numeral plus alphabetic letter suffix designator. Nothing exactly like a skill level except for slightly different MOS designators describing supervisors again.

I've been told its the topography (a mountain range between city basin and "high" desert), the proximity to the Pacific, changeable wind patterns. In the summer months the city basin gets Inversion; good for a radio path bent into San Diego by the inversion layer.

I'd ask you to provide some examples, but you're so wound up in your own tale that I won't ask you to further confuse yourself, Brain.

Honesty and truth generally trip YOU and your Feeble Five brotehr up rather nicely.

I imagine that you're a regular coca user, Brain, in or out of the cabana.

Obviously you're wrong, Brain.

Looking back over the progress tree of this thread I see a whole bunch of tit-for-tat back slapping by you and Lennie.

Must be some points you were stretching for there somewhere.

Heaven forbid "N0IMD" wound up being discussed as favorably in the Ahhhhh, yes...Lennie the rear area radio mechanic, braggard of over 2.2 millions passed, "arguing" about what constitutes a "direct combat military branch".

Along with his tales of his own "bravery" as an ADA "radio operator"...Dodging the Russian Bear and duck-and-covering from incomming artillery.

Yeah.

Right.

I can't help but wonder where the morbid self-depreciating behaviour came from, Brain.

Probably from mommie-dearest making humiliating comments when she was changing your diapers. Maybe if she'd stop doing it before you turned 12 it wouldn't have made such a negative impact on you...?!?!

So...In a part of the United States where the weather doesn't vary by more than 10% change in any 96 hour period for 300 days of the year you have to "worry" about WEATHER...?!?!

In as much as Lennie never completed his flight training, it's hardly of any consequence.

An IFR ticket from the FAA isn't necessary for SoCal driving, Lennie's Walter Mittyisms notwithstanding.

Actually, "oil burner routes" were for the attention of general aviation pilots BELOW certain altitudes...They are routes where you might suddenly find yourself eye-to-eye with a Lancer at treetops.

No, Morkie...No one else here has to do anything to try and "embarish" you...You do it all to yourself without any help from anyone here.

Claiming to be a field grade military officer when you're not is an embarrassment (and MAJOR insult). Then compounding THAT lie with one about having been an NCO when you never were makes it worse.

Claiming to be a 3-time college graduate when you can't spell correctly SHOULD be an embarrassment (not to mention a waste of money and a seat that someone who COULD have made use of the education with...)

Having been investigated in not one but TWO states for child molestation and elder abuse IS an embarrassment.

Getting repeatedly caught in one lie after another is an embarrassment.

In otherwords, NOTHING about YOUR alleged "sexuality" could be an embarrassment to YOU, Morkie...Quite the contrary...I bet there are good homosexuals, bisexuals and Pagans all over the world who wish you'd shut up and stop embarrassing THEM!

I know that as an Amateur Radio operator you embarrass me.

I doubt he can do that. His Cobra 148GTL only drops down to about

"former" Marines and "ex" Marines are only created by court

ANY level of military punitive action.

Frankie racked up not one but TWO court martials in ONE four year

He can justly claim to be a "former" Marine.

Why would anyone in Fiji want to participate in a newsgroup that's

Dear Mr Zeller,

You mention N9OGL's operations on 13mHz as being legitimate Part 15 operations.

May I respectfully suggest that you surf some of his USENET postings wherein he has been publishing his use of 25, 50 and even 100 watts for his "Part 15" station?

Omega One Radio is back on the air, on 13.556.00 MHz LSB, with a power output of 100 watts.

Todd N9OGL
OMEGA ONBE RADIO
13.556.00 MHz LSB

He's suggesting that he's putting that amount of power into dipoles yet maintaining Part 15 field strength restrictions.

If his operation is "Part 15 legal", then that means that over 50% of the folks on the Amateur bands are not using their Amateur licenses.

Claiming to be a field grade military officer when you're not is an embarrassment (and MAJOR insult). Then compounding THAT lie with one about having been an NCO when you never were makes it worse.

Let me get this right. Mark claims to have once been a Colonel. I've seen that. I missed the claim that he was a non-commissioned officer, such as an E-5 or above.
Mark is now 42 years old by his own admission. If one goes back twenty years to when he "may" have been in the military, that means that Mark had an astounding career. He rose from an NCO to a Field Grade Officer, a Colonel! That is an astounding record for anybody, much less a National Guardsman. To go from an NCO to Field Rank in a few short years is unheard of.

Hey, Mark. Were you a "light" Colonel or Full Bird? Did you get this alleged promotion before or after you got your degree in Geophysics?

Oh yes...Morkie claimed to have an onset of honesty and "admitted" that he was "only" an NCO in a "chemical corps" unit.

He tried to hammer me a couple months ago over a unit he was allegedly in. Of course the unit has since been "disbanded", according to Morkie, and he's not been able to present a single bit of evidence to his honest participation in the Armed Forces.

He tried to make up a unit at Fort Sill that was a 'sound alike" to a real unit.

The really amazing thing is that all "started" when he was "drafted" at about 7 or 8 years old.

His initial "claim" was that he was a LtCol in the "U S Army Chemical Corps". When I busted him on the fact that there was NO officer by his name then it was "I don't serve under my real name...The FBI and DoD said I could lie.".

Not too long after that he claimed that, well, he wasn't REALLY a LtCol...but "just" a Lieutenant. (...not specifying 2nd or 1st...)

Then he started in on how he had "admitted" his sexual perversity to his "CO", yet was not allowed to "resign" in as much as his MOS was in such critical need.

All of this was concocted by Morkie in a VERY lame effort to dislodge me from his other USENET misconduct under the woefully stupid idea that as a retired Marine Corps Gunnery Sergeant I would relent in the face of seeming to criticize an Officer.

Yeah. Right~!

Then I guess we can just save this letter and send it to the Editorial Staff at Monitoring Times, Toiddie.

I bet your "uncle" isn't about to compromise his editorial reputation on your illegal operations.

N9OGL alledges that Mr Zeller is his (Toiddie's) uncle.

It will be interesting to see, if proven true, if Mr Zeller will compromise professional ethics and reputation so that Toiddie can play

These are the numbers of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of November 1, 2006:

Novice - 24,154 (3.7%) [decrease of 25,175]
Technician - 287,444 (43.7%) [increase of 82,050]
Technician Plus - 34,786 (5.3%) [decrease of 94,074]
General - 131,994 (20.1%) [increase of 19,317]
Advanced - 70,607 (10.7%) [decrease of 29,175]
Extra - 108,563 (16.5%) [increase of 29,813]

(percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 322,230 (49.0%) [decrease of 12,024]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 311,164 (47.3%) [increase of 19,955]

Total all classes - 657,548 (decrease of 17,244)

Note that these totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. By May of 2010, the number of Technician Plus licenses will drop to zero, because all of them will have been renewed as Technician or allowed to expire. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

Part 95?...You call ME a fool...?!?!?

IDIOT!

Or is this yet another Freudian slip? Got one of those "export CB's" to use as the exciter for your illegal broadcast station, mudlump?

> When you own GR 2409A meter that cost $5,000 new then you can talk.

I can talk right now.

I have YOUR words telling us how you're using power levels in quantum leaps above what Part 15 is allowed to run, and into antennas that will more than effectively radiate those power levels at field strengths in excess of the aforementioned Part 15.

> But then you dont know ##### about > the law so STFU before I file complain against you for harassment.

Be my guest, Toiddie. I'll just attach all the copies of your profanities, threats, and your bragging of violation of federal law, especially Part 15.

Have a nice day, mudlump. Sober up before you try to come back in here you little brat. Then you can tell us more about your threats of harrassment allegations and your author uncles.

The point being that the Coded Amateurs are REALLY almost 60% of the Amateur population when one figures in the Tech Plus folks who have already been assimilated into the vanilla Technician.

Those are numbers that political appointees are impressed by.

Perhaps it's that simple math that prevents the FCC from broadstroking the code test out of existence...?!?!

I am sure he can.

Toiddie's been TOS'ed from his ISP's before. The best he can hope

Been listening on and off since the original posting dead air static on 13.556 LSB.

Hello Steve,

Bear in mind that only 10.7% are known to have passed 13 words per minute (advanced).

I honestly expect that the FCC will likely eliminate code testing but as to when, I haven't a clue.

There are also modes (PSK) that use less bandwidth than CW, although it appears that voice seems to be the most popular. It would be nice to see some expansion of the HF amateur bands, but a number of 3rd world countries are relying on HF rather than satellite, so I'm not holding my breath LOL.

The "on topic" post was due to a rational and mature post to respond to, Morkie.

None of yours meet that criteria.

> most of of was his normal trirade of lies and abuse

No lies. No abuse.

> he seesm to think for example I can't call some one on steal someone

And not a bit of it is "on topic", now is it, fatboy...?!?!

But then I guess "on topic" only "counts" when it's YOU trying to diss someone.

Sorry...It doesn't work that way. It's either fair game all the way around, or it's yet another Morkie Mularkie post.

BTW...Are all those "slow code crapathon" posts "on topic" about Amateur Radio, or are they yet ANOTHER example of how you bark out of both ends...?!?!

Dear Dumb fuck,

First off your talking to a fake, Since I just recently got on the web, Secondly, Zeller isn't my uncle, I do however believe that he was one of the persons who sent a request for a QSL card back when the station first started. I really suggest Stebie that you check header before responding to a fake.

No, that's not known.

For about 10 years before the 2000 restructuring, (1990-2000), the Advanced was available with only 5 wpm code if you had a medical waiver.

It was also possible to get a "5 wpm Advanced" for about a year after the 2000 restructuring, by the use of CSCEs.

So the possession of an Advanced license, by itself, is no more proof of having passed 13 wpm than an Extra is proof of 20 wpm.

I'm surprised it's taken this long. Almost 3-1/2 years since the treaty changed, and the rules are the same as six years ago.

Yup - they have their weaknesses and their strengths. More tools in the toolbox.

The SWBC folks are moving out of 7100-7200 - that effectively widens the 40 meter band.

However, not quite correct. It just takes more digging into the database to get that info. You can look up previous license class on any individual.
If an Extra's previous license shows as Advanced, you will then also know that they passed the 13wpm. You can also look at the record and see if they have upgraded since April 2000. If they held their General or Advanced prior to then, you know that they passed the 13wpm. For Extras, you can determine if they received their Extra before that date or not and know that they passed the 20wpm. However, it's probably more effort than it is worth to get that deep into the data.

As I understand the postings on license numbers, it is basically to see if there has been any effect on the growth of amateur radio.

Bandwidth isn't the only parameter. Each mode has its strengths and weaknesses.

I'd momentarily forgotten the waivers when I made my previous post. My ex-husband had severe hearing problems (both loss of hearing and tinnitus).
He passed the 5wpm and had medical waivers for the 13wpm and 20wpm.

Steve, I suggest you read Part 15, Part 15 has nothing to do with power (in Wattage) it has to do with the field strength (maininly the electrical field of the electromaganetic wave) you can put out 100 watts and still have the field strength as prescribed under part 15 (on 13.556 MHz it 15,848 microvolts per meter at a distance of 30 meters (90 Feet) CB radio's which run 4 - 5 watts is 10,000 microvolts per meter at 30 meters.....but you wouldn't know anything about that now would you??

Thanks for posting that Jim. Maybe now people will see dumbing down ham radio was a bad idea.

If you're really a code tested Extra, why do you want to dumb down ham radio? You should help me push for better radio exams by supporting an increase in speed of the code requirement. If we can get rid of the no-codes and nickle hams, test everyone up to 13 and 20wpm, no one will have to sit on the floor at club meetings anymore.

I like it, but there's only one problem. No-codes don't use toilet paper.

Somebody is going to have to Elmer them on how to wipe a butt and since

Nah, you're just stupid and don't read well to begin with. Were you like

That might explain why you're not smart enough to get a real ham license.

I don't follow that logic. Looking back over the last six years in the I'd vote Republican if it made sense, but it just doesn't right now.

That's the problem with ham operators, they are use to working with wattage, under part 15 it's a little different. I know I guy who builts part 15 device and has done for 15 to 20 years now and he tell you the same thing I told steve, but again hey stebie is a ham and only mess with wattage.

Nah, nothing of the sort. Dumbass fucktards like you are the reason most don't find the motivation to get licensed. No one wants to talk to your ilk. And soon enough, the HF bands will be much better. Hopefully a CB'er with HF privileges will move next door to you.

I don't want to dumb down amateur radio, but you very much want to.
You see, amateur radio is supposed to be about advancement of the art, and preparing and maintaining a civilian population with contemporary communications skills Mandating a mode that has fallen completely out of military and commercial use as obsolete is contrary to the concept of advancement of the art. It is as if blood letting was a required course for a medical degree.

Code is fine for those who like that mode. I use it at least once a month. However, it is no longer the mode that is best in weak signal conditions, or that uses the narrowest band width for effective communication. PSK31 runs circles around code. And guess what....many of the most fervent code guys I know cheat and use computers to print the received code on a screen, and a keyboard to allow the computer to generate their sending.

An amateur extra exam these days covers information a lot more current than that on the exam just a few decades ago. Perhaps instead of harping on code as some indicator of intelligence, you should direct your efforts to having all hams retested on license renewal, to make sure they continue to be current with the state of the art in amateur radio. Or do you believe that de Forest era vacuum tubes are more relevant to amateur radio in the 21st century than integrated circuits?

When you place 100 or more posts a day, is that not a "crapathon"?
Sure it is.

You haven't the sense to see that Slow Code is returning your spams in kind in an attempt to show you just how ridiculous you are.
You need professional help, Mork. Perhaps Woger will loan you his therapist.

I finally get it..... Slow Code is the CB of these newsgroups!!!!!

Just so all get the point, (including Slow Code, who is obviously, well, "slow" like they used to say way back when I went to high school, if you know what I mean), Slow Code's posts here is the example of the equivalent of what happened to CB in many areas of the country... The absolute dumbing down and lack of any useful content whatsoever. Unfortunately, like the typical bad apple, these areas created a stereotype of all of the CB fraternity, despite some (though relatively few) really dedicated and intelligent people on their band.

Fortunately, no matter what the FCC and ARRL do about whether code is required for a general license, the ham bands will never get as bad as the crapola that Slow Code has interjected here!!! (and in retrospect, CB band is probably not as bad as the crap SC pumps out daily.) The CW requirement has absolutely nothing to do with the posts SC is submitting, just his sicko need to try to monopolize the groups and drive off as many people as possible while attracting as much attention as he can.

In fact, if ARRL/FCC were to announce tomorrow that 20wpm would be required for a general license and 50 for an extra, SC would be on the other side of the fence trying to get people to respond to get the code requirement removed, as there clearly is no chance in hell he could ever pass a real test (e3ven the current 5wpm). It's all bluster and posturing, and has nothing to do with anything in the real world. I've seen this way tioo many times before, and most of the clients I've encountered with the particular problem SC exhibits are on some serious medication most of their lives.... (As further evidence, note his moniker Slow Code... If he was really serious about the code, he would be using something more appropriate like Fast Code...)

Take care, and if you actually see the mysterious (and "affected") Slow Code, please check to see if he's taken his meds for the day before you hang around very long. His type tends to have rather severe and often violent mood swings....

Have you a reason for posting this message twice? Perhaps you thought the No-Coders wouldn't get it the first time through. (I agree...)
It is painfully obvious that a select few of you are not gifted with a sense of humor. You take umbrage at Slow Code's comments while being unable to read between the lines and see the tongue-in-cheek humor.
Lighten up, guys.
You go on to make an off-the-wall statement that, "and most of the clients I've encountered with the particular problem SC exhibits are on some serious medications." Is that so? And you are an authority on such? Take a break, Rick. Pop a Thorazine and calm down for Chrissake!

Aw, come ON, Rick! You've gotten your sphincter twisted into a knot over a few posts that were obviously done to raise the ire of humorless Hams such as yourself. Lighten up, already! Do your heart a favor. See the humor.
Your last comment is the icing on the Angry Cake when you say of Slow Code, "His type tends to have rather severe and often violent mood swings...."
And you know this, how? Did you toss a lamp against the wall while reading Slow Code's posts? Kick your cat across the room?

I'd posit that you are being a bit moody yourself. Your current Hissy Fit is a prime example. You played right into Slow Code's hands.

Thank you for the laughs.

I finally get it..... Slow Code is the CB of these newsgroups!!!!!

Just so all get the point, (including Slow Code, who is obviously, well, "slow" like they used to say way back when I went to high school, if you know what I mean), Slow Code's posts here is the example of the equivalent of what happened to CB in many areas of the country... The absolute dumbing down and lack of any useful content whatsoever. Unfortunately, like the typical bad apple, these areas created a stereotype of all of the CB fraternity, despite some (though relatively few) really dedicated and intelligent people on their band.

Fortunately, no matter what the FCC and ARRL do about whether code is required for a general license, the ham bands will never get as bad as the crapola that Slow Code has interjected here!!! (and in retrospect, CB band is probably not as bad as the crap SC pumps out daily.) The CW requirement has absolutely nothing to do with the posts SC is submitting, just his sicko need to try to monopolize the groups and drive off as many people as possible while attracting as much attention as he can.

In fact, if ARRL/FCC were to announce tomorrow that 20wpm would be required for a general license and 50 for an extra, SC would be on the other side of the fence trying to get people to respond to get the code requirement removed, as there clearly is no chance in hell he could ever pass a real test (e3ven the current 5wpm). It's all bluster and posturing, and has nothing to do with anything in the real world. I've seen this way tioo many times before, and most of the clients I've encountered with the particular problem SC exhibits are on some serious medication most of their lives.... (As further evidence, note his moniker Slow Code... If he was really serious about the code, he would be using something more appropriate like Fast Code...)

This is off-topic (OT) - find a political Usenet.

Wow, short-memories.

Remember the 1980s and Reagan administration's fight against the Sandinista Revolution (1980 - 1990) in Nicaragua ?

Of course, most people remember the Iran-Contra affair with Oliver North.
It involved several members of the Reagan Administration who in 1986 helped sell arms to Iran, an avowed enemy, (1 of 3 "axis of evil" countries) and used the proceeds to fund the Contras, an anti-communist guerrilla organization in Nicaragua.

12 years of Republican administration sure did not solve that problem.
BTW, remember Jose Daniel Ortega ? -- received majority of votes this week

Odd. If you take the formula for an isotropic radiator emitting P watts and solve it for the electric field, e, you come up with e = sqr(30*P)/r at a distance of "r" meters (see my earlier posts).

For a power of 5 watts at a distance of 30 meters, that becomes e = sqr(30*5)/30 = 0.408 volts/meter = 408,000 microvolts/meter.

That number is 400 times larger than the value you quoted. Where in the heck are you obtaining figures like 10,000 microvolts/meter? Have you been consulting Woger again?

Code is just one part of it. Here's my four step plan that will keep ham radio from becoming like CB:

Step 1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

Step 2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Step 3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Step 4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

This is what I want:

Step 1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

Step 2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Step 3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Step 4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

You're right, I stand corrected.

Hey Markie, Sorry,
That was the first mistake I ever made on usenet.

You can keep trying for the busted urinal. Good luck.

Shut-up. You can't even get a real ham license. The only HF you can do

Actually what the FCC did was to take the 11 meter band and create the General Radio Service Class C and Class D.
Class C was limited to only a few channels (6) limited to control and paging. Class D was farmed out as 23 channels with only AM modulation and a max. of 5 watts power input to the finals. This was later modified to 40 channels and 4 watts input.
The classic CB'er came just prior to the increase to 40 channels.

U R, and continue to be, a slow witted idiot.

In college, it was common knowledge to professors that a student needs to hear a new idea six times to learn it (be presented with, shown, etc.) It seems to me, you are taking a bit longer.

Is your whole family as slow witted and demented as yourself?
1) Do you receive disability for a gross genetic mental illness?
2) Did you receive a violent and tragic head injury which has left you in such a deplorable condition?
3) Do you hail from some third world country where manners and morals are left wanting?
5) Were you treated evilly by your parents? Where you molested by a pack of raging homosexual pedophiles?

Really, here we ALL realize there is something terribly wrong, grossly disgusting and evilly maniac which has befell you(downright diabolic!)

Tell us man, we are here to help you! Don't be afraid to admit it and come clean. You already have our pity, although you found the end to our patience a while back.

Now, now slow idiot. Your delusions seek to gain the better of you, hold out and fight back man, get yourself some decent backbone!

There is no danger of tossing morse onto the trash-pile and following progress. Indeed, many works in art, literature, poems, novels, etc.
have documented and made lesson of how often times a man can be made a fool and prisoner of his own fears. You are doing no less, but before our eyes you demonstrate a real life example. Quite educating really.

No, we need not fear amateur radio becoming a chitty service, we only need to fear chitty hams--such as the like of you...

SC is not a ham..
He has no call
He has no life
If he was a ham he would be out tapping code and enjoying it like the rest of us or working some remote station somewhere.
He is funny..kinda like reading dilbert in the funny papers..

I am also curious as to how he knows so much about CB?

CB aka 11meters does not bother me at all, I do not care what they do down there...

AS for code....some like it some do not...

As for Ham becoming like CBers , we are self governed...we would hunt down and shut down any one breaking the law.

Yes, I am hilarious. Sad part is that you are too dense to pick up on the nuances of what I wrote, but then that's typical of you.

Believe me SC, even Mark is above your level of intelligence, spelling included. You are WAY out of your league attempting to debate me. Sure, call me a piss-ant. BFD. Again, and as I have previously informed you, no one, including the FCC, ARRL, _______ <---name your group here, give a rat's ass what you think. Send mail/email to whomever you wish. They'll soon file your garbage in the circular file where it properly belongs.

Air and vacuum have nearly identical permittivity and permeability - the properties which control the impedance of air and of free space and which in turn relate electric field strength to the spatial power density. It sounds to me as though you are simply blowing smoke and have no real understanding of what you just attempted to write.

Todd is operating illegally. No amount of bloviating can make that fact go away. Deal with it.

LONDON, Ky. (AP) - A southeastern Kentucky woman was bitten by a snake during a church service and later died, a law enforcement officer said. Linda Long, 48, of London died Sunday at University of Kentucky Medical Center, said Brad Mitchell, a detective with the Laurel County Sheriff's Office. Long died about four hours after the bite was reported, the Lexington Herald-Leader reported.

Officials said Long attended East London Holiness Church. Neighbors of the church told the newspaper the church practices serpent handling. Lt. Ed Sizemore of the Laurel County Sheriff's Office said friends went with Long to a local hospital Sunday afternoon, and she was taken to UK. "She said she was bitten by a snake at her church," Sizemore said.

Handling reptiles as part of religious services is illegal in Kentucky. Snake handling is a misdemeanor and punishable by a $50 to $100 fine. Police said they had not received reports about snake handling at the church. Snake handling is based on a passage in the Bible, in the Gospel of Mark, that says a sign of a true believer is the power to "take up serpents" without being harmed. Church officials could not be reached for comment.

The funeral was scheduled for 2 p.m. Wednesday at the Arthur's Chapel Church in Rosehill, Va., according to the Rosehill Funeral Home.

"And no, I did not have sex with my son. But if I did I certainly

He replied, "We kept the receipts." -- Bill Hicks

"They thought I was fair game. I was an instrument of purpose to achieve their desires and not 100 percent real and ALSO that they had me by the short curlies because I thought that the world revolved around them and therefore I think that I am fair game and rightly so. If they want to play dirty, I get to too. It's not a one-way street. I will use the physcial strength that I have over them, my superior 5'7-3/4" height advantage, the boxing moves I paid to learn, the suprise of pussyfooting up to them with their back to me in a public place 18 1/2 years after the fact and thus not only do will they not know that I am but a pica's distance away from them, but that I even exist on earth." -- Chris Tsao

Looney Maroon nominee for August 2006 Johnny D Wentzky foamed:
"You never asked someone who goes into areas of the internet that are only for adults who has an underage id somehow or another if they are a cop posing as an underage person online?
I guess lots of people just don't watch dateline or read stories much.
Why don;t you go to pervertedjustice,com and see what they do. They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they lied to membners of the public.
They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats.
Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. They are doing nothing more than usury and fraud in many cases." -- Wentzky

A continuous wave or continuous waveform (CW) is an electromagnetic wave of constant amplitude and frequency; and in mathematical analysis, of infinite duration. Continuous wave is also the name given to an early method of radio transmission, in which a carrier wave is switched on and off. Information is carried in the rhythm and spacing with which the signal is sent. CW is thus is a form of on-off keying (OOK). In radio transmission, CW waves are also known as "undamped waves", to distinguish this method from damped wave transmission

Wrong. In the case of an electromagnetic field, Gauss' law is only one of four equations (Maxwell's equations) that are needed to determine the electric field strength. Since a changing magnetic field can produce an electric field too (Faraday's law), Gauss' law is not enough. The only time it is sufficient is in the electrostatic case.

Fortunately, the case under discussion doesn't require the solution of a set of partial differential equations (Maxwell's equations), because the solution has been incorporated into the idea of the impedance of free space. That includes the permittivity of the medium (as used by Gauss' law) plus the permeability of the medium, and it allows one to express the power density in space with an Ohm's law type of equation that involves only the electric field and the impedance.

That simple equation says that 5 watts of radiated power will produce an electric field strength which is 40 times larger than that claimed by N9OGL. That's why I asked him if he'd been consulting with Woger again.

Perhaps he's been consulting with you instead. You just got an "F" in electromagnetics.

own definition in message <3C36FDCC.76EC1...@houston-hunks.com> :

"Therefore, I find your story difficult to believe. Your own anonymous status makes the story even less credible."

Fuckup Shemale Lee fucks up again in

"I wonder how long it will take Ohio Valley Internet Services to boot your ass?"

"FUCKUP Lee" <SLee@houston-hunks.com> geography idiot and imbecile fucks up as usual when he thinks Marshall County, Alabama and Marshall County, West Virginia are the same place in message <afvsc2$6a...@pita.alt.net>:
" Then what is at http://www.geocities.com/skywarncanwarn/ doodle brain?
It sure looks like the Marshall County ARES, and it even has a place to send email."

Fuckup Lee, unaware of the IRONY of his question, still fails to answer whether or not he found the Marshall County WV ARES site which he said was http://www.geocities.com/skywarncanwarn/, a Marshall County, AL ARES website in <3D4708C2.DD7E8...@houston-hunks.com>:
"Are you ever going to answer those questions, or are you going to keep on running?"

Stupid Lee (Stagger Lee@ houston-hunks.com) provides yet anothre example of his idiocy in <way.way.beyond.wo...@houston-hunks.com>:
"That's because transmission line loss and SWR are not directly related."

Hail Eris!
Demon Prince of Absurdity

"And no, I did not have sex with my son. But if I did I certainly wouldn't tell you. Something so beautiful and precious should be kept private." -- Kathy L. Mosesian, or possibly not really her, confesses she may be a liar and committer of incest with her own son, in MID:
<cfcd3f4660694e3afeaadaa2723e9ab1@msgid.frell.theremailer.net>

The reporter asked Colin Powell (or George Bush), "What proof do you have that Iraq has weapons of mass destruction?"

He replied, "We kept the receipts." -- Bill Hicks

"They thought I was fair game. I was an instrument of purpose to achieve their desires and not 100 percent real and ALSO that they had me by the short curlies because I thought that the world revolved around them and therefore I think that I am fair game and rightly so. If they want to play dirty, I get to too. It's not a one-way street. I will use the physcial strength that I have over them, my superior 5'7-3/4" height advantage, the boxing moves I paid to learn, the suprise of pussyfooting up to them with their back to me in a public place 18 1/2 years after the fact and thus not only do will they not know that I am but a pica's distance away from them, but that I even exist on earth." -- Chris Tsao is secretly John Wentzky's psychic twin. MID: <1161246083.152300.195760@m73g2000cwd.googlegroups.com>

Looney Maroon nominee for August 2006 Johnny D Wentzky foamed:
"You never asked someone who goes into areas of the internet that are only for adults who has an underage id somehow or another if they are a cop posing as an underage person online?
I guess lots of people just don't watch dateline or read stories much. Why don;t you go to pervertedjustice,com and see what they do. They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they lied to membners of the public.
They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. They are doing nothing more than usury and fraud in many cases." -- Wentzky almost comes out of the closet as a pedo/ephebophile in MID: <H%%Eg.28916$Uq1.22411@bignews6.bellsouth.net>

Country seems to be doing fine, Western might be sparse on the ground but that's the nature of that beast.

Um, not quite:-) The very presence of the CW signal conveys SOME information (e.q. the fact that something is out there generating it:-)

It's the turning on and off of the wave that conveys most of the USEFUL information:-) Which makes CW communication a DIGITAL mode, by the way.

When you get a more advanced license, you can become as cool as Woger is like this:

GLENDALE, WV: The FCC sent a Warning Notice November 9, 1999, to General licensee Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, citing evidence that the licensee had been "deliberately and maliciously interfering with the radio operations of other licensed amateurs" on 20 meters. "This interference has occurred at various times in the last several months and includes broadcasting music and other unidentified transmissions," said a letter from FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth. Hollingsworth warned that continued operation of the type described could result in a fine or license revocation proceeding, and he requested that the licensee contact him to discuss the allegations.

GLENDALE, WV [UPDATE]: The FCC had written General licensee Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between Wiseman and Advanced licensee Steven A. Tunder, N8WGM, that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth cautioned Tunder and Wiseman to review ï¿½97.1 of the Amateur Radio rules and "to make certain that whatever disputes that may exist are not carried over to Amateur Radio frequencies." Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Wiseman alleged in a subsequent communication to the ARRL that Tunder had been harassing him and that he had made the FCC aware of it in the first place. Wiseman indicated that he had been in touch with Hollingsworth to clarify the situation. The FCC had sent Wiseman a Warning Notice last November in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters.

GLENDALE, WV: The FCC requested July 11, 2000, that Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, retake the General examination elements under the supervision of an ARRL-VEC volunteer examiner team. Wiseman must appear for retesting by September 11, 2000, or his license will be canceled. Applicants appearing for re-examination are granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements passed. The FCC had written Wiseman on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between Wiseman and another licensee that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Additionally, the FCC had sent Wiseman a Warning Notice last November in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters.

you got part of it right their are four equations

One Guass governs eltrostatic and electro dynamic cases as well One normaly learns the the electrostatic case case first

FOOLs like you don't bother to learn more but you have failed to account for the fact in any RF mattter power dvideds beteween the elictric and Magnetic and then the 2 regenerate each other (with some path loss in short you can't profrom a calution worth doing without more than data than you have and more equation

none of which matter either

what matters is the measurable filed strangth

to determine if Todd is legal or not you MUST prefrom the test and till that is done Innocent till found guility is ther Law

That's a pretty amazing error rate.
Did you do that on your own?

As to spammers, it's hard to think something more low-life than a spammer. I mean they really don't care about anyone but themselves do they?

I wondered why I didn't see that post until I went back an looked it up elsewhere. It seems that the post is 661 lines long and that my filters blocked it (they accept no post longer than 500 lines).

I must say that I'm flattered that Woger keeps a file on me which goes back years. It shows just how much he hangs on my every word. He probably rereads my old posts whenever he needs some inspiration to help him get through the next day. Say, for example, that he is about to give a talk on r.m.s. voltage or on negative SWR. Our past discussions on those two topics could be invaluable to him.

But I may be temporarily moving on, Woger. I just discovered that Mark Morgan wants to learn about electromagnetic field propagation, so I'm going to help him out. When he's ready to tackle advanced topics such as negative SWR or the calculation of r.m.s. voltage, you can take over.

I think you will find that cw is making a comeback. Now that the cw requirement has been serverly reduced, more hams are getting into cw and it should be starting to make a comback....

Second... I also think you will find that the fcc, and in my country the IC, are deeply regretting the conversion of 11 meters to 'cb'.
Virtually all of our bad radio operating procedures, of all radio services, can all be traced back to the bad operating technique found in the 11 meter cb band....

Wasn't it 4 watts output?

Some more facts:

11 meters was never a ham band by international treaty. FCC allowed hams to use it on a shared basis with Industrial, Scientific and Medical users after WW2. This was done in part as a sort of compensation for hams' loss of 160 meters to LORAN after WW2.

The Citizens' Radio Service was created by FCC in the late 1940s. The original Class A and Class B services were on UHF - right where FRS and GMRS are now.

The problem was that, in those days, the UHF radios that performed well were big, heavy, expensive, power hungry and complex. Simple UHF sets that were small, light, inexpensive and simple didn't perform too well.

The Citizen's Radio service had so few takers at the end of 10 years that FCC created Class C and Class D, at 27 MHz. Low power channelized sets for 27 MHz could be made small and inexpensive even with the technology of the late 1950s.

FCC could take the band away from hams because it wasn't a ham band by treaty anyway. They also argued that the creation of the 15 meter ham band in 1954, and the gradual return of 160 to hams, meant that 11 meters wasn't critical to ham radio.

Add to that the fact that 11 meters wasn't the most-popular ham band anyway. Many popular rigs of the time didn't even cover the band. It wasn't harmonically related to the other HF/MF ham bands of the era, and in many areas it was full of noise from ISM users like diathermy machines, vacuum formers, etc. Since many other countries didn't allocate 11 meters to hams, there wasn't as much DX to work on 11. And the 1.7 MHz wide 10 meter band was right next door.

Of course hams didn't like losing the band, fearing that it was a harbinger of things to come, but it wasn't. Over the intervening years, we hams got all of 160 back, and three new HF bands at 30, 17 and 12 meters. The cb boom of the '70s came and went, and hams are still here.

Yes I hear it, but I haven't been able to listen enough to know if there

There is nothing to fear John, unless you fear integrity and quality and are against improving yourself. You don't have to do a single thing I say, you can continue to be a scumbag if thats all you really want to be.

I'm only trying to keep the scumbags out of ham radio. It's people like you that help there rest of us know what chitty looks and smells like. Tnx for your support. Remember to flush the toilet when you're done crappin.

That's funny, the people in uniform doing the clean-up work over there think we're winning, they can't understand why the democrats and the main stream media say the things it says regarding Iraq.

Of course now that the democrats have taken over, we have lost Iraq. We weren't defeated, we'll just cut & run.

Terrorist worldwide, rejoice. Democrats have handed you another victory!

That was a smart move for Rumsfeld. Why try to protect American and win the wars when the democrats are going to do everything they can to prevent it.

All along the democrats were more concerned about terrorist rights,

Using a new antenna, made from dynamite wire....at lease I know I'm getting out.

If you are an example of improvement then I'll stick with the 10-4 good buddy's any day. You spend a suspicious amount of time being negatively focused on one sector of a hobby. The truth is that in reality you wish you could be an accepted member of that same sector.
You are a reject of life and lash out at those who you would like to emulate. Enjoy what littler life you have,but for the most part you are wasting it.

The result of solving Maxwell's equations for the radiated field is that the electric field strength in volts / meter can be used to compute the power density in watts per square meter by means of the simple equation

P = e^2 / (120*Pi)

120*Pi is the impedance of free space, as obtained from Maxwell's equations.

Now that happens to be a pretty complete equation, and it can indeed be used as it stands to figure out which power density, P, corresponds to a particular r.m.s. electric field, e. You can also solve the equation for "e" if you want to calculate the electric field when you already know the power density. It is a steady-state solution, and it excludes non-radiating fields (the so-called near field), but it is good enough for most initial calculations.

So, no, one doesn't need additional equations, and one doesn't need to worry about power division between the electric and magnetic fields. That's already been included in the formula given above.

: none of which matter either

They only don't matter because you have the details wrong. If we tried to get at the radiated field strength your way, we'd never get an answer at all.

: what matters is the measurable filed strangth

If you can't estimate the field strength beforehand, then you CAN'T possibly come up with a good initial station design. You'd have to put something up and hope it works out. I suspect that's exactly what

Todd has done, and it is a very dangerous way to operate.

: to determine if Todd is legal or not you MUST prefrom the test and
: till that is done Innocent till found guility is ther Law

If the calculations suggest that Todd is very probably exceeding the legal electric field strenth (and they do), it is something that no sane station operator should ignore. Calculations are inexpensive: A certified field strength meter is not, and a NAL is even costlier.

after your post in GIGO

you simply don't understand nor can you even quote accurtely Maxwell none of matters whatmatter is the feild strengh that basicaly requires a guage Todd has one and and has measured the FCC can too

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

And let's not forget Lardass Lloyd's arrest record:

Lloyd claimed he saw " a bug on my pee pee and I was trying to shake it off".

parents moved and didn't prosecute.

Date: December 21, 1998 caught jerking off behind the local porno magazine

July 4, 1999 (you have something to tell us about july 4th Lloyd?) caught putting his penis in the cotton candy machine at local fair, then offering some special cotton candy to young boys.

October 14, 1999 caught cornholing a friend in back seat of car at local park

As a former user of 11 meters, the Ham Band, this summary pretty much reflects my memory of events. BTW, my old Multi-Elmac AH-54 [if I recall] had 11 meters factory installed. It drifted "slighlty" during each transmission. Slightly meaning 50 +/- KHz. I had to use crystal control to stay reasonably close to any frequency!

But then you ARE easily amused huh, bright shiny objects seem to capture all your attention.

"Two-test" Slow Cunt makes good sentence. Slow Cunt is so stupid, he rehashes 6 year old bullshit. Roger still PASSED his retest and upgraded, something you couldn't do.

The letters to both Wiseman and Tunder were a preemptive "warning" that did not allege any activities. That hardly qualifies as a warning in the context of someone having actually done something.

The letter with the warning in it ALLEGED interference, and warned of consequences.

The retest letter made no reference to interference; in fact gave no reason for requiring the retest. Such a request is part of the Volunteer Examining program. It could have been made for any number of reasons that may have had nothing to do with any of the addressee's actions. An investigation into the VE group that gave the test, would be a good example.

Only one letter was a warning referring to interference.
But then Republicans aren't noted for telling the truth, are they?

Hearing voices as you post, are you? You seem to be sticking up for your fudgepacking partner Markie a little too much.

I see that you need a great deal of expert instruction. Fortunately,
I happen to have some time available this month, so I will attempt to enlighten you on the subject of Maxwell's equations and electromagnetic radiation.

In my absence, please feel free to consult either Todd Daugherty or Roger Wiseman.

First assignment: Define a field as used in physics, and then try to describe both static magnetic and static electric fields. Feel free to use Wikipedia if you get stuck. Later on, we'll move to dynamic fields, because they form the basis of electromagnetic radiation.

P.S. Maxwell's equations have appeared in my sig several times (see the current sig), so you were quite wrong when you said that I couldn't write them down properly. What happened instead is that you simply don't know enough to recognize Maxwell's equations when they are right in front of your face. If you can't recognize Maxwell's equations, how in the world will you ever pass the new, code-free Extra class exam? Think about it.

ROFL, I always laugh at that reply, because he posts it so much.

No other person from the VE group was tested, so we have to assume that the FCC guys were just sitting around the office one day when one of them said, "Hey, guys: Let's retest Roger Wiseman." There was no reason for it at all, of course, and it just happened.

The bulk of their ever increasing property taxes goes to fund the Socialist

I hope not. The FCC providing unlicensed spectrum for the masses was one of the smartest thing they ever did! Yes, it leads to all sorts of horrible operating practices, but CB and -- more contemporarily -- FRS/GMRS and WiFi had provided huge benefits for people (and many millions of dollars in equipment sales) nationwide. I'd hate to live in a country where there's no such thing as a license-free $20 pair of FRS-type walkie talkies or $20 WiFi cards for high-speed Internet access.

I'd say they can be traced back to human nature. People were rowdy and "uncouth" in, say, taverns for thousands of years before CB came along.

the bad part about what they did with CB was providing that band for and limiting it to local comms when everyone knew it was usable for longer range stuff this insurred folks would not have much respect for the rules (wether they obeyed em or not

I'll agree with the uncouth in the taverns part, but, disagree with the context.

CB brought the uncouth out of the tavern and onto the air.

Slow Idiot:

I appeal to you. Perhaps you cannot grasp what we are seeing from your words, let me attempt a better explanation to those presented to you in the past:

Have you ever seen someone in a public place who has something on his face? Have you ever made a motion to convey this to him/her? Did you perhaps see a puzzled look upon that persons face? Did you come to realize they just didn't get it? Did you see the revelation of what you were trying to convey to them suddenly hit home in their mind? Didn't you find they were quickly able to correct the condition and make things right and proper? Didn't you find them a bit embarrassed and thankful to you for helping them?

Or, for yet another example, have you ever attempted to explain a new concept to another individual? Did you ever have that experience where the person failed to get the concept, became confused, and interpreted the data you were attempting to convey them into a totally different concept, or were unable to form any concept in their mind at all? Then, perhaps with further explanation and examples offered from you, they finally were able to grasp the true and real concept. Perhaps then you noticed they were a bit embarrassed from taking so long and appearing so dense? They they apologized for taxing your patience and expending your time and thanked you?

Did you ever consider the fact that the above may be occurring, and is indeed my intention, when I am attempting to convey to you the simple fact that, "U R an idiot?"

Do you realize all we wish is for you to recognize this truth and allow that knowledge to correct your present behavior?

Warmest regards,
thanks for your time,
JS

Drive by the tavern... tune past the CBers? ;-)

I suppose amateur radio is supposed to be more a high-class dining establishment than a dinner -- suit, tie, and official FCC-approved membership required --, although these days you wouldn't necessarily know it from listening to the airwaves.

Hmmm:

You mean you can quickly tell the difference from some self-important, self-worshiping, self-impressed, carried-away-with-oneself personality as opposed to one considering himself/herself to being a student-of-the-world? And, your final implication being, "This group of amateurs is full of the former?"

You present a most interesting observation! <in-a-contemplative-state>

I think it depends where you listen...

This past weekend, I was active in the November CW Sweepstakes. Made over 400 QSOs in 74 sections (all states except Hawaii). Lots of activity but nothing objectionable at all.

I think one reason for the relative unpopularity of 11 meters with hams was that the band was not harmonically related to other bands, meaning crystals bought for 11 were probably not useful on any other ham band.

Markie takes pride in all the various ways he can mis-spell something.
Try not to figure out what Markie is saying, it will just give you a headache and it's not important anyway.

We need to keep pointing out their evil. Democrats throw BS out and ignorant people believe it.

There's a radio show, the host has a person ask simple political questions to voters on the street. Most of the people are democrats, it's a Blue state.

It's sad the number of voters that can't tell you the name of the vice-president, or other simple questions. Informed voters votes are getting cancel out by retard votes.

Slow Idiot:

Let me then try but one more example, a bit different perhaps will cause the revelation:

Remember from your history classes, there was a time when most if not all the worlds peoples believed the world was flat and, that if one were to set sail in a ship and venture too far, one would fall off the planet (disk?) But yet, now we look back at these peoples and see the blindness their foolishness and fears caused? We laugh at such childish intellect.

Can you make a connection between the above and your own fear--that maniac, illogical, simplistic, all consuming and quaint fear of life without morse code which holds you in blind bondage? Face your fear and be free man!

JS

How is that possible, Len?

Are you always mistaken or incorrect? That's what you seem to be saying.

> You are using your OWN subjective opinion as a "fact."

What subjective opinion? I have commented on some of your mistakes here. Your errors are frequent enough that any rational person would conclude that you are often mistaken, or incorrect.

How?

Is it WRONG to express ideas that do not agree with your ideas?

You do criticize them for opposing what they think is a bad change.
That's a fact.

You criticize far more than OPINIONS, Len. That's a fact.

You can't find the quote, can you, Len? You realize you misquoted me

You're not the moderator, Len.

Just show us the exact quote - if you can. I think you can not.

Really? Your behavior proves otherwise.

So what? Real estate laws are not that much different here.

> YOU do NOT live here.

How do you know for sure?
>
> YOU do NOT pay real estate taxes here.

Even if that's true, so what? That has no effect on the validity of the analogy. Do you think only those who pay real estate taxes can comment on real estate laws?

> That "analogy" has NO BEARING on the subject of this newsgroup, > NOTHING concerning amateur radio.

Yes, it does.

Here's how it works:

You opposed a change to the real estate zoning in your neighborhood because you thought it was a bad change. You wanted to keep the zoning as it was when you were young and had just moved into your house, more than 40 years ago.

You don't like "outsiders" trying to change the zoning, or even commenting on it in a public forum.

BUT,

You are an outsider to amateur radio. You are not a radio amateur, have never been one, and will probably never be one. Your only involvement in amateur radio is your wordy, error- and insult-ridden postings to Usenet, and your lengthy comments to FCC.

Yet you are trying to force changes in amateur radio regulations. And when radio amateurs, who are involved with amateur radio, oppose those changes, you criticize them.

> >We amateurs have what we have because we asked for it and defended it.

> No. You are MISTAKEN. You made an ERROR. You are WRONG.

> "You amateurs" bought into existing regulations. YOU did > NOT make the law.

We amateurs have gotten the laws changed. Just like that real estate developer....

> >You were not and are not involved.
>
> No. You are MISTAKEN. You made an ERROR. You are WRONG.

How? Did you get an amateur radio license? Set up a station?
> Federal regulations are NOT closed to the public. US amateur > radio is NOT a fraternal organization were ONLY "members" > get to say anything.

Who said anything different?

You've been spamming the FCC for years, but you haven't been very effective at it.

And besides those windy comments and your postings to usenet, you just aren't involved in amateur radio, Len.

> I know considerable about US amateur radio,

All of it second-hand.

> know several radio amateurs personally,

So what? Doesn't mean you are involved.

You made the error, Len. I just pointed it out.

> I know several not yet licensed in amateur radio.

So do I.

> US amateur radio is NOT a secret society. It is not a > government-classified secret.

Who said it was?

All I said is that you're not involved. And you're not.

> >Many radio amateurs are trying to stop a change in the amateur radio > >regulations because they think it is a bad change. Yet you criticize > >them.

You just admitted that you criticize them personally - not just their opinions.

How is it wrong for someone to try to change zoning laws?

How? All I did was ask a question. How can it be wrong to ask a question?

Can't you answer that question?

"ENOUGHT"?

Nope.

I say you are often mistaken.

And you are.

I ask you, "If not, then why would you not structure your words differently?"

NOTE: This message makes NO statement as to your words worth. It only points out the error in your statement.

Trane should be made to fix this and recall all the units that have been installed. I can pick this interference up on a 2 meter receiver in my car for blocks. The FCC should bust them if they don't fix it...

I cross posted this to some of the amateur radio groups.

Hail Eris!
Demon Prince of Absurdity

"And no, I did not have sex with my son. But if I did I certainly wouldn't tell you. Something so beautiful and precious should be kept private." -- Kathy L. Mosesian, or possibly not really her, confesses she may be a liar and committer of incest with her own son, in MID: <cfcd3f4660694e3afeaadaa2723e9ab1@msgid.frell.theremailer.net>

The reporter asked Colin Powell (or George Bush), "What proof do you have that Iraq has weapons of mass destruction?"
He replied, "We kept the receipts." -- Bill Hicks

"They thought I was fair game. I was an instrument of purpose to achieve their desires and not 100 percent real and ALSO that they had me by the short curlies because I thought that the world revolved around them and therefore I think that I am fair game and rightly so. If they want to play dirty, I get to too. It's not a one-way street. I will use the physcial strength that I have over them, my superior 5'7-3/4" height advantage, the boxing moves I paid to learn, the suprise of pussyfooting up to them with their back to me in a public place 18 1/2 years after the fact and thus not only do will they not know that I am but a pica's distance away from them, but that I even exist on earth." -- Chris Tsao is secretly John Wentzky's psychic twin. MID: <1161246083.152300.195760@m73g2000cwd.googlegroups.com>

Looney Maroon nominee for August 2006 Johnny D Wentzky foamed:
"You never asked someone who goes into areas of the internet that are only for adults who has an underage id somehow or another if they are a cop posing as an underage person online?
I guess lots of people just don't watch dateline or read stories much. Why don;t you go to pervertedjustice,com and see what they do. They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they lied to membners of the public.
They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. They are doing nothing more than usury and fraud in many cases." -- Wentzky almost comes out of the closet as a pedo/ephebophile in MID: <H%%Eg.28916$Uq1.22411@bignews6.bellsouth.net>

Good point! There are FCC rules regarding interference / EMI and Trane may have flagrantly ignored them. Maybe a threatening letter to the Customer Service Department written with the help of those of us who are amateur radio / electrical engineering types would force them to finally do the right thing.

No, but I can imagine that it goes a long way in explaining the use of the word slow in Slow code.

He has someone to remind him to breathe and they happen to be a CBer.
That's why the fucker has a hard-on for rrcb. I filtered him and things seem better here.

First, I would get a schematic of the electronics/wiring/specs/and installation instructions for the specific model (web is a good place maybe.) More of a chance the installer has made an error in the installation, grounding, shielding, etc., could save you from the possibility of "crying wolf" too soon... I suspect the engineers of using more caution in the design of the unit, then the installers in the installation of the unit.

Mark,

I had a severe interference MF to HF from a neighbours gas heater unit. Not sure what it was that was causing it but it was being effectively radiated by the external cables, power and control. I traced the interference to the unit using a portable rx. I silenced it by wrapping both cables tightly around a 6 inch ferrite rod. The cables held in place by cable ties and tape. Hope this helps.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." Do they send warning letters to those who have done nothing, Rog?

Yep. The FCC allegedly has an interesting tape of you doing the alleged deed. There are allegedly a number of other copies floating about.

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. Yes, as a matter of fact, I do have a background that gives me more than a bit of insight into his type. Tongue in cheek humor, it's not. This

BWHAHAHAHA Lardass, you'd better go re-read the FCC enforcement actions (in your case you need somebody to re-read it for you), plenty of retests have been given and most either fail or don't show. Roger pased his test and upgraded (something you can't do), so that was a real lousy "sanction", huh?

NOTE: Issuance by the FCC of a Warning Notice indicates that the FCC has what it believes to be reliable evidence of possible rules infractions and not necessarily that the recipient has violated FCC rules. The FCC has the authority, pursuant to §97.519(d)(2) of the rules to readminister any examination element previously administered by a volunteer examiner.

CERTIFIED MAIL--RETURN RECEIPT REQUESTED

Mr. Roger L. Wiseman

610 Glen Haven Avenue

Glendale, WV 26038-1302

SUBJECT: Amateur Radio license KC8JBO

Dear Mr. Wiseman:

Pursuant to Section 97.519(d)(2) of the Commission's Rules, 47 C.F.R.
Section 97.519(d)(2), the Commission has the authority to re-administer any examination element previously administered by Volunteer Examiners (VE's).
The Commission may either administer the examination itself, or under the supervision of a Volunteer Examiner Coordinator (VEC) or VE designated by the Commission.

Accordingly, we are requiring you to re-take the General Class Amateur Examination, (Elements 2, 3(A) and 3(B)) under the supervision of an American Radio Relay League Volunteer Examiner Coordinator. This examination must be completed on or before September 11, 2000. The required code speed
that you must demonstrate is 5 words per minute.

Please be prepared to verify your current address and to present a cancelled

Radio license consistent with the elements you pass upon re-examination.

He's too white, and way too old. Under 18 is too young, of course (gay sex with teens is illegal, even in Canada, but straight sex is fine (as young as 14), as long as there's no power imbalance involved...Hypocrisy? Nah.
Why would you think that?). At any rate, some non-white twink is more my

The test will continue to dumb down because ham radio is dying. There's a new radio game in town, its called cell phone. Like it or not anyone can get a license to use them.

I've been in ham radio for over 30 years. The same discussion is going on today as was when I first started. It has never been settled and never will to satisfy all. Equipment prices will skyrocket as the number of hams continues to decline. In fact they already have. I laugh when I see radio's like an IC-706 that someone is trying to sell on Ebay for $900 plus when only a few years ago new ones were being had at Hamvention under $600. Radio is dying folks enjoy it while the government allows us to have it. There is no "use" for all the Techs anymore.Allthis brainpower should be put together to find a use for your existence instead of continually hashing the same old dead beaten horse.

DC motors are notorious noise generators. Those of us who used to be mobile when 6 VDC was the value of a car battery, and alternators did not exist, will attest to the facts of generator [DC motor] noise.

A DC motor uses brushes to contact windings within the motor. As the motor turns the brushes continually make and break current in the rotating armature [inductance]. This making and breaking creates a very wide HF and lower VHF noise spectrum. [Lots of sparks].

The solution, in the olden days, was a coaxial capacitor mounted directly to the frame of the motor with the DC power running through the capacitor. I recall the capacitor was about 1 inch in diameter and 2 inches long. Sprague made such a critter.

Hope this history helps.

Scanners and listening to the cops will die out too. Each police car will have a wireless broadband set-up and the individual cops will carry around a wireless link device to communicate to the computer in their car and that will be "THE END" for scanners!

Obviously, you are both proponents of "Realistic Philosophy!" And, I do admit, such thinking does provide one with an explanation as to where these chunks of matter, which keep landing on my head, are coming from! <straight-face> I accept such until a better explanation comes forth...

Nice thought, but I went a bit down that road--I'm fuzzy about the specific details but for one reason or another the people that I spoke to didn't give me anything positive. Something about the generation of RF interference not applying to a product like a furnace. Since this has been a problem for so long and Trane has not been mandated to fix it lends some weight to what I was told. I did tell the Trane Rep that I was going to contact someone in higher management (VP etc) and issue a complaint at that level----didn't phase him. Then I put in my cable line and didn't follow up. For those of you still aggravated by the RF noise why not try this route? I guess that if you go the way of the Small Claims Court you probably have to sue the installer as well as Trane and it would have to be for a complete replacement (one without the problem)or a removal and money refunded.

I'm pretty sure these motors don't have brushes and are electronically commutated and the electronics are causing the EMI...

You can thank the Neo-Kommies.
Our founding fathers had it right the first time. Never should have allowed Commons to vote.
They knew what would happen and so it has...

Anything that generates RF inside the USA is regulated by the FCC. If your cat's butt emits RF in the USA it's regulated by the FCC.

Hi Mark, Modern HVAC, dishwashers, washing machines,ect. use variable speed drives, which increases the efficiency of the devices. The increased efficiency produces increased RFI due to the switching action of the solid state devices (SCR's, BJT's, IGBJT's.ect). My washing machine drives me crazy on Sat. morning on HF as my maid does the weekly wash. As for what you can do? I don't know, it would require vast amounts of filtering at the drives, I am sure that Trane and other mfgrs are not willing invest in.

This is completely different from the usual thermostat interference, and will be much more difficult to get rid of.

It has always been a hoot to watch him twist that to suit his lies.

The letter sent specifically states, "an ongoing personal dispute between Wiseman and another licensee that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters."

Un-Wiseman, take NOTE once and for all; The letter does NOT imply that you were being retested for, as you say, "any number of reasons". It specifically states, "allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters" and dance as you try, you cannot change the meaning of the text. It is no secret you did this, Un-Wiseman. You simply make yourself look even more foolish than you already are by continually lying about the letter, thus allowing us poke to the soft spot in Baby Wiseman's little head so we can hear him squeal.

Nice dancing, though.

Interesting discussion, folks....

As a controls engineer and High-Voltage electrician.... as well as delving into HVAC control of late... here's my observations...

These manufacturers will always take the cheapest route possible and damn the consequences. This is particularly true in power and control systems.

A whole lot of manufacturers are moving toward PWM drives on their blowers in particular. Many solutions are an 'on-board' frequency chopper that is integral with the blower's motor.

These choppers are cheaply built and cheaply engineered. I suppose they thought RFI and EMI would be insignificant due to the control being mounted on the motor... but they're noisy as hell.

Suggestions: Replace the power cables with a shielded, VFD rated cable. Belden makes a wide variety... I think they're called the VFD classic line. Pay close attention the unit and cable grounding. Check to be certain your house ground and neutral connections are only tied together at the service entrance panel of your home.

My 2 cents...

Jake

I'd check with people on repeaters you can hear and ask them. Someone should know unless they're also clueless no-coders. If all else fails, you can take your HTX 202 back to Radio Shack and exchange blank stares with the clerk.

It's life and death issues which are important to free people everywhere.
When you're dying after a terrorist attack, radio will be the last thing on your mind unless you're hoping there's a CW operator nearby. But you French have become weak Limp-wristed commies since WWII, so I forgive your shit your pants, cry-baby, cater to terrorist, ignorance.

No-codes and nickle hams are bad examples for the type of people we want for a good radio service. People see no-code and they think ham radio is just another group of people that are appliance operators that talk on radio like CB'ers do and have no skills.

If we hadn't dumbed down the test elements for a license, we would have good hams, and people would see the value of the service and know a ham radio license is something that is good to have to work for.

As Jake said.... with the addition of....
Make sure that you have proper earth grounds for your power, and the HAM rigs/shack. That will go a long way towards eliminating RFI. Make sure that all the bonding screws in the furnace are clean and tight, make sure that the furnace has a proper ground also.
When I put the shack together, I drove a seperate 8ft copper ground rod, and silver brazed #6 solid copper to it, then silver brazed the wire to the copper ground buss on the back of the bench. All equipment grounded.....no problem.

First off, I want to say I have never posted anything on nimbusters (until today). I have never posted "She-male" images (that type of material I hate more then anything) nor do I really every want to post anything on there. NIMBUSTERS is a virus, which sits on the world wide web, a group of Neo-nazi's who go around spewing their hate, and trashing other people's sites. Threatening, and wishing certain people (like myself) would Die, or ask if people know anyone that would payu to kill someone (like me) NIMBUSTERS and it little crew of misfits think I'm full of shit when I said I was bring the site down, the truth is I'm NOT full of shit, i sick of them harassign me on here and on the newsgroups (that's when I first learned about the board and began monitoring it and saving pages for evidence) NIMBUSTERS and it's members had me removed from an ISP, thus infringing on my right to free speech, so life a bitch and it's now your fucking turn. The material I gathered, will not only turned over to the host of the website for removal, but will also be sent to the DOJ (including the post from the member looking for someone to pay to Kill me) You see boy you think your fucking with some dumbass, guess again...I do have the Money to go after you and I am going to go after you....just wait and see you stupid motherfuckers!!

Wrong. If the cat's butt emits RF, it's regulated by the FCC. But, digital equipment used only in transportation vehicles - busses, cars, aircraft - and equipment used in appliances - HVAC equipment mentioned specifically - are exempt from Radio Frequency Device regulations. The rule says "....are exempt from the specific technical standards and other requirements contained in this part. The operator of the exempted device shall be required to stop operating the device upon a finding by the Commission or its representative that the device is causing harmful interference".

As to harmful interference, just because the noise floor rises 20db for 5 seconds on a 50 kHz segment of 20 meters when a bus passes your house, it isn't going to be considered harmful interference. As much as you might like to think that it is, a detectable signal from your neighbors Air Conditioner isn't going to be considered "harmful interference". A carrier that obliterates a specific, used - as in "there's a repeater 3 miles away running 200 watts on 444.600, and the carrier from the Carrier (or Trane) nukes it" - frequency might result in a letter. Just " 'cause you can hear it" ain't gonna cut it.

Hi again Mark,

I think Jake is on the right track, whatever the source of noise inside the unit its the mechanism that radiates the noise that needs to be attended to. In my case it was the external cables, choking them off with ferrite sorted out my problem. To suppress the noise at source within the unit seems a bit hard for me. I also suspect there may be more than one noise source in the box.

A quick check of the web turned up a site with posts dealing with the same problem you are experiencing, it seems someone was able to make some noticeable improvements in the rf interference generated--but not totally eliminate... Just might be worth you time time to look, the link I will paste is a long one, if it wraps you may have to copy and paste both lines into the address bar of your browser and make sure there have been no breaks, spaces, caused the whole link. It's nice when Markie is gone because you can post about ham radio and not have to worry about him taking a crap on it.

Have a little ham radio fun this weekend. In between some of the other things you do, maybe put the headphones on and make a couple CW contacts.

So - Brian and company, WHY do you keep replying to this guy? I plonked him LONG ago. Quit carrying on a chat with him, it will die. I only seen HIS reply because you AND others are allowing it to be posted in YOUR replies. Sheesh.

Usually the no-code techs have a better idea as to how echolink and IRLP work than most of the old-timers, because it is the only way that they can access "long distance" radio. Most of the old-timers don't consider it to be "real" radio and as such, are often stuck in their ways and slow to accept the new form of communication on the service.
It is similar to many of the other forms that were incorporated into amateur radio and were slow to be accepted, such as SSB, SSTV, even ATV. I don't think any of these are any less ham radio than CW is ham radio.

That's because it's not 'real radio'..

Yes, the FCC not only has cognizance, but quite legitimately does not want to see products throwing a lot of EMI out which cause you and perhaps your neighbors to have reception issues. If I were at Trane handling Customer Service and was threatened with FCC action, I would react.

Well, as far as I know, SSB, SSTV, even ATV, along with IRLP and even echolink as long as you are using a radio at one of the ends of it during a conversation, would all be considered "real radio."
Talk about getting a grip and getting a clue. That isn't even an arguement.
At least try to make a point and back your claim.

Well that's my concern.
There are more and more of these kinds of units being installed everyday.
We can't "home brew" a fix for all of them.
Someone needs to get to the FCC or to the manufacterer to fix this at the source before it gets worse.

As you describe your setup it does meet USA National Electrical Code. Your home should have ONLY one earth connection, not two!

As you describe it, your house presumably has the electrical service panel grounded to an 8 feet long ground rod where the service enters the house. You seem to have added a second 8 feet ground rod to your home specifically for the Ham station.

Check with a local electrician for specific compliance issues.

Echolink is communication on the internet. Millions of people do that daily, with no license needed.

You can do the same thing with a cellphone.

There is nothing wrong with Echolink, but it is silly and dishonest to call it communicating by radio, which is what hams do.

When a person says he "worked" Germany on Echolink, he is either mistaken or dishonest. What he has "worked" is his local telephone connection, usually a distance of about five miles. It is hard for me to believe that this person could really believe that he "worked" Germany. If I pick up my cellphone and call Germany, can I get a QSL card for it, and get ARRL credit ??? Huh ??

It utterly amazes me that a person would study for a ham exam, only to use Echolink, when you can do the very same thing with any computer or telephone. There is no ham license or ham equipment needed to talk on the phone or on the computer. Ever heard of ICQ and other chat programs ? Ever heard of Voice Over Internet ?

Lots of folks have fun on Echolink. For that reason, I truly think it is Great !!! Just don't pretend that it is ham radio when the world knows that it isn't.

Well, that's my two cents worth. See ya on the radio waves !!

Actually as I live in a lightening prone area, my home has several earth grounds as do most of the other buildings in the area.

The main service panel has 2 ground rods tied to the same buss, The TV cable entrance has a seperate earth ground, as does the telephone entrance, and the sub panel in the garage.

--Followed your link and was surprised to see that my comments, posted over a year ago, are still floating around cyber space. Obviously apparent, that the Trane RF noise problem hasn't been addressed by them. What is disconcerting is that they have done nothing to minimize or alleviate the problem and after more than a year are still producing furnaces with a known RF noise generating inducer motor. Clearly a case of COST vs Customer satisfaction---Charge more for the furnace, if that what it takes, and go back to the motor that didn't have this problem. In my case, I had a perfect back-to-back comparison--in the morning the first furnace worked without incident--by noon, the new furnace was screwing up my (rabbit ears) kitchen TV. I took a look at the new furnace and immediately saw that the inducer motor was different--size and configuration. With a little bit of experimentation, I finally narrowed the cause down to the inducer motor. The installer had no clue, was very helpful and cooperative in interfacing with Trane. Since I must have been early in the "new motor" time frame, Trane shot-gunned the problem trying to eliminate it, ----new control board, verifying electrical grounds, replacing the shielded motor harness (the only thing that showed some signs of improvement). I guess at that point they must have figured out that it was a bigger problem then they expected and that's when the Trane Rep stopped returning my calls. It was easier to run a cable line to the TV then to continue dealing with the installer, who was shrugging his shoulders by this time, and the vanishing Trane Rep

I agree that echolink, on its own isn't radio, but that is why I added that at least on one of the ends should be connected by radio. Preferably, your end would be at least using the radio, or what is the purpose of getting a radio license.

As for just calling someone in Germany, I can't say that I would know too many people that I could just randomly call and would (a) be willing to talk to me and (b) that I would be able to understand, since I don't know German. At least, with ham radio you have a start, since you usually can hear them before you start talking to them. I have never used echolink to communicate, so I am not exactly sure how that is kept straight on there, though.
Also, if I were to talk to someone in Germany, by echolink or IRLP, I would state it as that and not that I "worked" them. I agree that there is much more to be said for working a station by HF, than when someone is doing by way of the Internet. But it is a form of communication that is available to hams and should be exploited as much as possible, so that it can be used in any times of need.
I am sure that probably locally during Katrina, all Internet was out, but if someone was on the fringe of the outage and could reach a repeater that was linked to IRLP or echolink, then he would be able to communicate anywhere and get messages into out of the area by that means. Not quite as good as HF, but if you don't have the privileges, then it is a start.

Not quite true!

I run 1KW on low bands [75 and 20 meters]. I have a tuner and low pass filters in line. My station is properly grounded to the service panel ground/earth rod. This connection is also the equipotential surface for the operating position.

My station meets ALL FCC requirements.

If a neighbor's tv, phone, stereo, or whatever, picks up my transmissions the problem is with their equipment and I am NOT responsible for correcting the situation. I will advise them regarding what needs to be done at their end and at their expense. The best demonstration is to invite them into my station and have them witness my tv, phone, stereo etc., being interference free.

The best demonstration is an RFI free home station.

We, hams, are not responsible for deficiencies in consumer electronics. That rests with the manufacturer. The next time you buy a stereo read the Part 15 compliance statement!

Most likely it states, I paraphrase, this equipment MAY receive interfering signals from near by transmitters. Buyer Beware!

It should also state that the device may not emit any interfering signals.

Interesting. I've never heard that before. Thanks for the correction.

If you go though old posts dating back to many moons ago, in this amateur newsgroup--and others, you can easily see there is a very defined class system to amateur radio. What may not be openly apparent is that this is a multi-class system. Now, on the surface of it all, one is lead to believe this class system relates directly to the class of license an amateur holds--his knowledge, overall abilities, personality, intelligence, etc. Yet, some within this class system have, and just below its' surface, implemented a secondary class of class system.

This secondary class system relates directly to an individuals ability to produce a system of taps on a device able to key a transmitter, it is more motor skills based than any other skill I can possibly relate it to (like how well one can skate, hula-hoop, hop-scotch, play jacks, hum a tune, etc.), perhaps better viewed, in the light, as someone capable of rubbing his head and patting his stomach with few errors in implementation of the actions and done at a good speed. This secondary system seems to make no note or make considerations of other skills or knowledge which a ham possesses into consideration. Indeed, a severely limited autistic person who had a gift for such tapings, and at least a minimal ability to communicate by verbal speech and text (brag in speech and text?), would reign as king and be supreme leader (worshiped?) In such a class a sheer idiot can brag of genius (and frequently seem to do so.)

When one reads and understands the premise, goals and purpose that amateur radio was first established on, its' charter, it can be seen this class system runs in a perpendicular direction and fashion to the original purpose(s.)

Interesting, and more a statement to human nature, in my humble viewing and assessment, than it can possibly be related to anything else, wouldn't you agree? And, when brought to this light of day and viewed in its' entirety, it stands rather small in scope, would you not agree, again?

Some see this as a rather shallow endeavor and are amused by it. Others seem to poke fun at it in satire. To others, such behavior is disgusting and revolting to their intelligence, would you deny them their opinions?

Regards,
JS
